INTRODUCTION.

THE compiler of the following work engaged in a kind of business with which he was entirely unacquainted, and has pursued it to a much greater length than he expected when he commenced. It is well known to many persons, that the late Hon. Charles Stearns, of Springfield, Mass., collected a large "mass of facts" for the purpose of publishing a history of the original town of Springfield, and as it was his intention to publish some genealogies in the history, I undertook to collect some of the genealogies of the descendants of Dea. Samuel Chapin, and had collected quite a large number previous to his death. His history of Springfield remains unpublished. Many friends were desirous that I should continue the work of collecting, and I have, with the assistance of friends, continued it until the present time. It was the original intention to collect only those who bore the name of Chapin, but in sending in genealogies, several sent in the marriages and descendants of females. I could not therefore reject them, and they were accordingly arranged with others. But courtesy to those who had returned genealogies of males only, required that the descendants of the females of their families should be included, as some were very anxious that it should be done. I accordingly received and entered such as friends chose to send in, with some which I collected myself. But the arrangements were so made that they could not be altered without great inconvenience. I have therefore appropriated a particular part to such as are not included in Part I. of the work, and I think the arrangement a very judicious one, under the circumstances, although I should have made a different arrangement if I could have had the whole work before me at the commencement of the arrangement. The name and number of the female is given, and it is stated to what family she belongs; then follows the name of her husband, and the names of her descendants in succession, so that the descendants are in one body, and the different generations distinctly shown. The work is largely composed of the descendants of Japhet and Henry Chapin, sons of Dea. Samuel Chapin. The descendants of David Chapin, son of Dea. Samuel, have been included so far as any record of them has been found ; and I have not found any person who can give any farther account of his descendants, and perhaps they have become extinct. As to Josiah Chapin, another son of Dea. Samuel, I have not found any of his descendants who could make it convenient to furnish me with but a small portion of the names, &c. of his numerous posterity. A few have sent in partial genealogies which are published in a body together; and may be of some use to some persons who may hereafter collect a genealogy of his descendants. As the life of Dea. Samuel Chapin is considerably connected with the early history of Springfield, it is proper that some sketches of the early history of that town should appear in the work. I had early determined to publish REV. E. B. CLARK'S centennial discourse. But that did not appear sufficient. I commenced writing some sketches, but finally concluded to publish the Address of the HON. GEORGE BLISS, SEN., at the opening of the Town Hall in Springfield, March 24, 1828, with the appendix, and it is believed that those two publications contain the most complete early history of the ancient town of Springfield, ever published.

I have received assistance from several persons in collecting the genealogies, for which they will please receive my thanks. I find that if I begin to name those who have rendered valuable services in the prosecution of the work, I should not know where to stop. Many persons to whom I have written, have readily answered and given such information as they possessed ; while others have made no return. The greater part of the few first generations have been copied from manuscripts, although the ancient records have been a guide in part. Later generations have been obtained by the most available means, and great care has been taken to have them correct ; but it is not expected but that some errors will be found, and I should deem it next to impossible for the first edition of a large genealogy to be perfectly correct. The town of Springfield was divided in 1848, but the north part, which is now Chicopee, has been known by that name from time immemorial, and wherever Chicopee is mentioned, it is merely to show the part of the town, without being at the trouble of every time mentioning Springfield. The spirit of emigration seized early upon the descendants of Japhet and Henry, although there was plenty of good land at home. But farmers in those days were not confined to a few acres. But mind ye, they did not emigrate to the State of New York, nor to the rich lands of the then unknown West, but they went as far as Wil-braham, Ludlow, South Hadley, Granby, and one grandson of Dea. Samuel Chapin ventured as far as "Cold Spring," now Belcher-town. But the fifth generation heard of the rich lands in the State of New York, and several families removed to what was then called, "Whites Town," and some to other places in the State of New York; and now many of those families and their descendants are scattered over the Western States.

As the work will probably fall into the hands of many persons whose knowledge of genealogies is not very extensive, I have considered it of great importance that the work should be as free from intricacies as possible. It has therefore been my endeavor to make the arrangements such that the work may be readily understood by all classes of readers. As to the arrangements. The number of the generations is placed at the top of the page. The number of the head of a family precedes the name of the head. Then the names of the heads of the families; then follow the remarks if any, on the head of the family. Next the names of the children, who will of course be the next generation after the one named at the top of the page. Then the remarks, if any, (in this place) respecting the children. On the left hand of the names of the children, are placed their family number in small Arabic figures, (although some of them may not be exactly in the order of their births); and still on the left hand, and at a greater distance, in larger figures, the general number of the persons who are numbered. As several were received after the numbering was completed, they are of course without numbers, and in the Index are paged. The whole of Parts II. and III. are paged in the Index. The children have the family numbers. In regard to orthography, the original or family records have generally been followed, though in some instances it has led to a variation in spelling the same name. It was thought best to adhere to the copy, and leave the reader to judge of the correctness. In regard to dates, family records have generally been followed, in preference to public records. Some abbreviations have been adopted. Single figures in parenthesis, thus, (1) (2) (3), indicate the different marriages of the same individual. Abbreviations are used for words of most frequent occurrence, as b. for born; d. for died; m. for married; unm. for unmarried; int. ent., for intention of marriage entered; pub. for publishment for marriage; res. for resides or residence; ae. for age.

In the following work I have said but little respecting the history of the church in Chicopee, or of its religious institutions, or the religious character of the people, as the Rev. E. B. Clark has done that in his centennial discourse. Persons who have had no experience on the work of a genealogy, can form but a faint idea of the labor of collecting, arranging, and carrying through the press a genealogical work. But if the following work shall meet the approbation of the compiler's numerous friends, he will feel highly gratified, and will not regret the labor he has bestowed upon it.

ORANGE CHAPIN.

CHICOPEE, (WILLIMANSETT,) August, 1862.

NOTE.—In Allen's Biographical Dictionary, page 210, it is stated that "Chapin Seth Dea., an officer of the Revolutionary war, died at Mendon, Nov. 15, 1833. His grandfather, Joshua, came from Lancashire with a brother Gershom, who settled in Springfield. From these have sprung many ministers."

I am of the opinion that the foregoing is an error. For 1st, Dea. Seth Chapin mentioned above, descended from Dea. Samuel Chapin, (who settled in Springfield, Mass., in 1642.) through his son Josiah Chapin. 2d, I have not been able to learn that any Chapin bearing the christian name of Gershom, ever settled in Springfield.

GENEALOGY.

The Opinion of REV. SAMUEL CHAPIN, D. D. of Rockyhill, Ct.
as to the native place of DEA. SAMUEL CHAPIN.

"SAMUEL CHAPIN is believed to be the progenitor of all who bear the name in this country. Respecting the history of the family previous to his landing here, or the precise time of his arrival, nothing is definitely known.

The family is probably of Welsh origin.

His opinion is founded on some obscure traditions recollected by Calvin Chapin as current in Chicopee and the prevalence of some Welsh phrases and terms among the people of Chicopee, the greater part of whom bear this name. Calvin Chapin recollects on one occasion a man who was severely run by his mother, retorted by calling her Welsh, in the way of reproach.

On a map of England, in the possession of C. Chapin, there is in Derbyshire, the name of Chapin frith, (frith meaning a rough, mountainous region of country.) This on another map is written Chapelin or Chapalin, and he thinks perhaps, as they were always a very religious, conscientious people, they may have been so termed from Chapel, and this name with a little modification became Chapin.

Samuel Chapin took the freeman's oath in Boston, in the year (June 2,) 1641. He lived probably in Dorchester, and was a Deacon in the Church, a man much esteemed and employed in public business. He removed to Springfield in 1642."—By Rev. A. L. Chapin, D. D., President of Beloit College, Wis.

FIRST GENERATION.

I. DEA. SAMUEL CHAPIN came with his family to reside in Springfield in 1642. It would rather appear that he resided in this country considerable time, perhaps eight or ten years before he came to Springfield, and perhaps the greater part of his children were born in this country, but no record has been found of the birth of but one—the youngest, and we do not find any record of but one of his sons taking the freeman's oath. David, his son, was made a freeman in Springfield, 5th day 2d month, 1649. He is supposed to be the progenitor of all who bear the name in this country, and I have not found one of the name who could trace their lineage to any other source. In 1652, 10th of October, Samuel Chapin was appointed one of the magistrates of Springfield, and in 1654 his commission was extended indefinitely. He was also much employed in other public business—a useful and highly esteemed man. In the records of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay in New England," the name John Chapin is mentioned in connection with the building of a movable fort, March 4, 1633-4, and in July, 1634, mention is made of a meadow a part of which "John Chapin hath mown." That is all the information I have found respecting him. Whether he is a brother of Samuel or not is a matter of mere conjecture. Dea. Samuel Chapin died Nov. 11, 1675, age not known. His wife's name was Cisily, maiden name not known. Mrs. Cisily Chapin died Feb. 8, 1683, age not known. Children—

2. ¹Japhet, b. 1642; d. Feb. 20, 1712, ae. 70.
3. ²Henry, d. Aug. 15, 1718.
- 4. ³Catharine, d. Feb. 4, 1712.
5. ⁴David.
6. ⁵Josiah, d. Sept. 10, 1726.
7. ⁶Sarah, d. Aug. 5, 1684.
8. ⁷Hannah, b. in Springfield, Dec. 2, 1644.

It is not supposed that the children of Samuel Chapin are placed here exactly in the order of their births.

The Boston City Records show that Jane, daughter of Shem Chapin and Deborah his wife, was born Sept. 16, 1665. He might have been a son of Dea. Samuel, and died without leaving any male issue.

* Hon. Oliver B. Morris, Ex-Judge of Probate, is one of Catharine's descendants.

Japhet and Henry had families in the north part of Springfield (now Chicopee.)

David resided for a few years near the centre of the town of Springfield, and afterwards removed to Boston.

Josiah settled in Mendon, Worcester county. He was one of the original grantees of said town; it is said he was from Braintree and built the first saw-mill in Mendon.

Probably he did not reside for any great length of time in Springfield. Josiah m. Mary. Son Samuel b. Nov. 11, 1659. Spr. records, vol. III., p. 71. For further particulars, see under the head of Josiah Chapin's Descendants. 1667

Sarah m. April 14, 1647, Rowland Thomas, and had 13 children.

Hannah m. Sept. 27, 1666, to Dea. John Hitchcock, and had 9 chil.

Deacon Samuel Chapin lived on the home lot next south of the Ministry lot in the centre of the then village of Springfield. His son Japhet owned one half of said premises, but sold his right therein (by deed bearing date November 19, 1667) to Deacon John Hitchcock, who had married said Japhet's sister Hannah.

SECOND GENERATION.

II. JAPHET CHAPIN, of Chicopee, son of Dea. Samuel Chapin, b. 1642; m. (1) July 22, 1664, Abilenah Cooley. Mrs. Abilenah Chapin d. Nov. 17, 1710. And a small stone in the old burying ground in Springfield marks the spot where she was buried. m. (2) May 31, 1711, Dorothy Root of Enfield, Ct. He d. Feb. 20, 1712, and was buried by the side of his first wife Abilenah. Their remains and the stones which mark their resting places have (probably) been removed to the new cemetery in Springfield.

Japhet probably resided for a time in Milford, Connecticut. As the Worshipful Capt. John Pyncheon of Springfield conveyed to Japhet Chapin of Milford, in Connecticut Colony, a small strip of land near Connecticut River in Springfield, Bounds east on Deacon Chapin's land. Deed dated 16th of November, 1669.

By Deed bearing date March 9th, 1666, John Pyncheon conveyed to Samuel Chapin the greater part of the land lying in the Valley between Chicopee River and Willimansett Brook. And by Deed bearing date April 16th, 1673, Samuel conveyed the same premises to his son Japhet Chapin. The said Japhet built him a house at the upper end of Chicopee street, north-westerly of where the dwelling house of Henry Sherman now (1862) stands.

Japhet was at the great fight at Turner's falls, May 18th, 1676, and on the outside leaf of an old account book belonging to said Japhet, I find the following, supposed to be in his hand-writing. "I went out Volenteare against ingens the 17th of May, 1676 and we ingaged batel the 19th of May in the moaning before sunrise and made great Spoil upon the enemy and came off the same day with the Los of 37 men and the Captin Turner, and came home the 20th of May." Thomas Chapin, son of Japhet, was one of the original grantees of the large tract of land which was granted to the officers and soldiers and their descendants in the Falls fight. And on another leaf of the same book, I find the following, "my father was taken out of this troubelson world the 11 day of November about eleven of the clock in the eve, 1675." After the death of Japhet Chapin, the Rev. Mr. Williams of Deerfield wrote a lengthy letter to his children, instructing them concerning the improvement which they should make of his death, and speaking of him as having been a man of great piety. This letter is now (1859) probably in the care of Mr. Dormer Chapin.

Their children found on record are as follows—

9. ¹Samuel, b. July 4, 1665 ; d. Oct. 19, 1729.
10. ²Sarah, b. March 16, 1668 ; m. March 24, 1690, to Nathaniel Munn.
11. ³Thomas, b. May 10, 1671 ; d. Aug. 27, 1755.
12. ⁴John, b. May 14, 1674 ; d. June 1, 1759.
13. ⁵Ebenezer, b. June 26, 1677 ; d. Dec. 13, 1772.
14. ⁶Hannah, b. June 21, 1679 ; d. July 7, 1679.
15. ⁷Hannah, b. July 18, 1680.
16. ⁸David, b. Nov. 16, 1682 ; d. July 7, 1772.
17. ⁹Jonathan, b. Feb. 20, 1685 ; d. March 1, 1686.
18. ¹⁰Jonathan, b. Sept. 23, 1688 ; d. Feb. 23, 1761.

*Hannah was married Dec. 3, 1703, to John Sheldon of Deerfield. The town of Deerfield was attacked by the Indians about three months after her marriage, and she was taken captive with many others, and marched to Canada, and after about two years many of the captives were redeemed and returned home. I have reasons for believing that Hannah's husband went to Canada and obtained her release before the release of the other prisoners. John, son of John and Hannah Sheldon of Deerfield, born in Springfield, April 12, 1706.

*Hannah's friends felt some anxiety in regard to her settling in a frontier town, and as she was making a dress previous to her leaving the paternal home, her mother told her she must make the dress so it would do to wear into captivity.

1720-21, Obadiab Miller and Widow Dorothy Chapin of Enfield were joined in marriage. (Probably she was the widow of Japhet.)

HENRY CHAPIN, son of Samuel and Cisily, was m. Dec. 5, 1664, to Bethia Cooley, daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Cooley of Longmeadow. He d. Aug. 15, 1718. Mrs. Bethia Chapin d. Dec. 11, 1711.

It appears that Henry Chapin did not reside in Springfield in the early part of his manhood, but took up his residence there about the year 1659. He, as well as his father, was a prominent man in town affairs, as appears by the ancient records of the town, and was a Representative to the General Court in the year 1689. Tradition says of Henry, that he was impressed on board a British man of war and served seven years, during which time he was in a severe engagement with the Dutch. He afterwards commanded a merchant ship and made several voyages between London and Boston, but at length, tired of a seafaring life, took up his residence in Boston, and afterwards in Springfield, where his father and family resided. Henry came to the northerly part of Springfield (now Chicopee) to reside, built him a house south side of Chicopee River, in what is now the village of Chicopee, on Ferry street, facing south on West street, near the large elm tree and a few feet east of the house formerly owned and occupied by William Chapin, one of his descendants. The house took fire and was burned, 1762. He also made a contract with John Pyncheon for 200 acres of land on the north side of Chicopee River. The following is said to be a copy of the contract.

March 9th, 1659. Sold to Henry Chapin 200 acres of land on ye north side of Chickkuppy River to run fro ye hills on ye east side, to the Great river on ye West, and on the south it is to be bounded by, and to join to Chickkuppy river, onley one 25 acres or thirty being by Chickkuppy river about the place which shall be judged best for a warehouse is to be taken out and excepted, out of the parcel yet so as ye 200 acres is to be made up there together. Also Henry is to have half of ye upper Island which is to be as equally divided as it can be, and also he is to have five acres of mowable meadow at the lower end of the muxy meadow. For all which he is to pay and allow me the sum of twenty pounds in Wheat at current prices at four several payments, viz., five pounds by the first of March next, which will be anno 1660, and five pounds by the first of March 1661, and another five pounds in March 1662, and ye last five pounds ye first of March 1663. All the payments to be in Wheat at price current at the several times of payment, this is the joint agreement betwixt us this 9th day of March 1659 as witness our hands.

Signed HENRY CHAPIN.
 JOHN PYNCHON.

Memorandum. I promised Henry that if I did part with the 25 acres or 30 acres or with the Islands, he should have the offer of them. (Said premises have been, and the greater part are still in the possession of the descendants of said Henry.)

Their children found on record are—

19. ¹Henry, b. June 1, 1666; d. April 29, 1667.
20. ²Sarah, b. March 3, 1670; record says Sarah, single woman, d. Nov. 6, 1732.

THIRD GENERATION.

III. SAMUEL CHAPIN, son of Japhet and Abilene, b. July 4, 1665; m. Dec. 24, 1690, to Hannah Sheldon. He d. Oct. 19, 1729.

His place of residence was at the upper end of Chicopee street, on the west side and near the residence of his father Japhet. His house stood not far from the place where Ephraim Chapin in after years built a house and where he resided and where his grandson Briant Chapin now (1862) resides. It was afterwards owned and occupied by his son Elisha, and after he was killed by the Indians, it passed into the possession of Abel, son of Thomas, and afterwards to Ephraim, son of Benjamin, who married Jemima, daughter of Abel, and after Ephraim's death to his son Frederick, and after his death to his son Briant. Samuel Chapin set out two pear trees on this place which bore fruit for the first time the year he died, 1730. One of said trees is still alive, (1859) and never failed to bear fruit, except one year, up to 1834, and has occasionally borne fruit since that time. The above pear tree bore a sweet and most delicious fruit, as the compiler of this work can testify, having ate of the fruit more than sixty years since, and often since that time. Said tree having become much decayed was felled with the woodman's axe, December, 1859.

Mr. Samuel Chapin had been at his daily labor on land which he owned on the west side of Conn. river and had just entered a boat on his return home at night, when he was fired upon by some Indians (and wounded though not dangerously) lying in ambush among the willows which grew near the water.

At the marriage of Samuel Chapin's daughter Abilene, there being a large number of guests and a short supply of seats, the young Misses were seated upon the sills of the house. The sills in those days were very large and placed on the top of the floors, or the bottom of the sills were as high as the top of the floors. When the dressmaker who made and fitted the bride's dress entered the room, and perceiving the large array of young Misses, exclaimed I wonder if all these little girls will ever become Brides, which remark caused quite a tittering among the juvenile portion of the females.

Reuben and Charles had large families in Salsbury. David had a family in New Hartford, Ct. Rev. Mr. Backus of Somers, who delivered a sermon at the funeral of Moses Chapin who d. Nov. 3, 1793, says in said sermon, he died in the 82d year of his age, and his father died in the 97th year of his age. He had thirteen children, eleven sons and two daughters; three of the sons are yet living. That nine out of thirteen, in one family, should exceed the age of three score and ten is very remarkable, even for this healthy climate, and has rarely been equaled since the days of the patriarchs. A little more than six years ago, five of the brothers were living in this town, their farms joined, and there was no neighbor between them. With sincere fraternal affection they lived together, pursuing the agricultural employment, for more than forty years. On the 22d of August, 1787, the oldest of that band of brothers died—the youngest, September 6th, 1791. Another breach is now made in the brotherhood.

Ebenezer had eleven sons, six of whom, viz., Ebenezer, Noah, Moses, Seth, Elias and Aaron settled on Somers mountain—their farms joined; after a time, Ebenezer went back to Enfield to take care of his father, and he died in Enfield. Ebenezer of six generations have lived on and occupied the same farm in Enfield. One of that name is still living on the same place. The other five who went to Somers lived and died there.

The outer door which was very thick and heavy, was filled with nails, to prevent the Indians from splitting it open with their tomahawks.

Mr. Isaac Chapin was partially insane during a portion of his life. He was possessed of some singular ideas. For instance, he supposed that he owned nearly or quite all of the pine plains lying east of the valley, Chicopee street. He made a practice of measuring his land by pacing it, that is, counting five paces or steps for one rod, and he supposed himself so accurate in his measures that he used to remark that he could pace it out to the forty-ninth part of a horse hair. When I was a boy, I often heard the remark made, when a person was very particular, you are as "exact" or as "particular as uncle Isaac."

Mr. Nathan Chapin removed from Springfield (Chicopee) to Ashfield, and d. at the residence of his son Japhet in Buckland, Feb. 13, 1830, in the 96th year of his age.

Serg. Nathan Chapin and several others from Springfield were taken prisoners at the battle of Ticonderoga, July 5, 1777. In the midst of battle, (he states that) he took shelter behind a tree, the bark of which was completely torn off by the balls, but he escaped unharmed. He and several other American prisoners were ordered to go to Crown Point to mow grass. They were furnished with provisions, a bottle of rum, scythes, grindstone, &c. And having only one inhabitant in the boat with them, they entertained him so generously with the rum that he fell into a very sound sleep: they threw the grindstone into the water, rowed the boat to a port of their own choosing, and left their overseer to finish his nap, while he advanced with a quick step homeward, bringing nine of his companions with him, the moss on the trees being in a great measure their guide through a trackless wilderness. In due time, they arrived home, to the great joy of themselves and anxious friends. The foregoing, I state principally from memory, having omitted several hours of sleep one night when a boy, to hear the old gentleman relate his adventures and hair-breadth escapes.

How a young man saved himself from drowning.—A young man of Chicopee, on the east side of Connecticut River, crossed over on the ice to the west side, on a very cold winter evening, to visit a young lady on the west side of the river, and “got the mitten” which young ladies sometimes have to spare, and on his return home, (being probably in rather a contemplative mood,) in crossing on the ice he went into the water in a place not frozen; the current in the river was so strong that he was unable to get on the ice by any ordinary means. Having on a pair of very thick woolen mittens, (not the one that he brought from the west side of the river) he laid his hands out on the ice, and it being very cold, his mittens froze to the ice, and he was thus enabled to draw himself out of the water, and reached home with his clothes frozen stiff, a much wetter if not a wiser man than when he left.

“A Muster Roll of Capt. Luke Hitchcock’s Company that came to the Lake st. Sacrament, 28th Aug. Capt. Luke Hitchcock. Lt. Nath’l Burt slain in battle, Sept. 8, 1755. Clerk, Edw’d Chapin.”

The roll then mentions the non-commissioned Officers and the Soldiers of the Company, also those who were slain in the battle of Sept. 8, 1755, and those who came up some days after the battle. The above Lt. Burt was the husband of Edward Chapin’s aunt Sarah. On another part of the same paper, I find the following—

He was also for a time in the war of the Revolution.

He erected a barn on the plain about one and a half miles east of Chicopee street, on the road to Ludlow, (known for many years as Doctor Skeele’s barn,) he having owned the place for many years, with the expectation of erecting a house there the next season, but death came and cut short his earthly plans. ELISHA CHAPIN, son of Elisha and Eunice, m. July 23, 1803, Betsey Morgan, dau. of Aaron and Roxany (Colton) Morgan of Springfield, (Chicopee Parish.)

About the year 1798, Elisha Chapin entered the service of the United States, as a marine, and sailed to the East Indies, under Lieut. Dimon Colton, or on the vessel with him, of Springfield; they remained most of the time in the vicinity of the Islands of Sumatra, Java, &c., for the protection of American commerce in that region. This was at the time when affairs between France and the United States wore so threatening an aspect, as may be seen by reference to the History of the United States at that period. He was in the service at this time about three years; it is presumed that one of the inducements to his entrance upon this service was to improve his health which was somewhat impaired, but it was his patriotism principally that moved him to it,—he held the office of Sargent. Soon after his return from the East Indies, he married Miss Betsey Morgan, who was born in Chicopee, on the 28th of June, 1780, and is now (1860) living in Springfield, at the advanced age of 80 yrs. He settled upon the homestead of his father in Ireland Parish, (West Springfield,) where he was born and where he died.

In 1812, our country was involved in war with the mother country; and again he felt called upon to engage in the defence of his country's rights. He with his brother Leonard enlisted during the war; he first acted as a recruiting officer and reported to Col. Larnard of Pittsfield, Mass., but he afterward received a Lieutenant's commission, and joined the army then at Sackett's Harbor, where he remained all or most of the time he was out, and where his brother Leonard, who also held a Lieutenant's commission, died. He, Elisha, and it is believed both, belonged to the ninth regiment. At the close of the war, he was ordered to report at Washington, which he did, and there and then received an honorable discharge from the service.

After this war was over, his health was so poor that he was unable to engage in any manual or other labor to any considerable extent, but busied himself in his garden and with his books, and became very well versed in Astronomy and Botany, and a very well informed man generally. In a year or two after his return from Sackett's Harbor, Mr. Henry Ludington, a neighbor having in his possession three rattlesnakes, proposed to Mr. Chapin to take and exhibit them to the people of that region, which he did, as Mr. Ludington had done before him. It was supposed that the teeth of these snakes had been previously extracted, but one morning, Mr. Chapin, in attempting to take one of them up, as he had done many times before, was bitten on the first finger of his right hand; his brother Riley very soon after applied his mouth to the wound, for the purpose of extracting the virus by sucking. Meanwhile, the arm was tightly corded above the elbow, and a noted snake doctor, as he was called, was sent for; the arm to the elbow became much swollen, and when the doctor arrived, had taken on the hue of the serpent—he ordered the arm and hand bathed in a decoction of lobelia, and a strong tea of rattlesnakes' violet given the patient freely: these directions were followed perseveringly and successfully. In the course of three or four hours after this course of treatment was commenced, the discoloration on the hand and arm disappeared, and the cord was removed—soon the swelling subsided and the patient became comfortable; but it was several months before he was restored to his usual health, indeed it is probable that this gave a shock to his system from which it never fully recovered.

About two years before his death, Mr. Chapin and his wife made a public profession of religion, and united with the Baptist church in Ireland Parish. He dated his experience back to 1812, at the time he was in the army. The disease which had fastened upon him in early life, and clung to him with such tenacity through all his days was asthma, of which he d. on the 16th of July, 1837, ae. 63 yrs., 4 mos. and 17 days.

Mrs. Chapin left home on the 7th of June, 1854, to visit her daughter, Mrs. Brown, at Chicago, and remained with her until Tuesday, the 18th of July, when she set out with her son-in-law and his wife, to return home. When they reached Buffalo on Wednesday evening, she was in her usual health, and in full expectation of being with her family in Albany the next day. A lady who had accompanied them from Chicago was taken ill on their arrival at Buffalo, and Mrs. Chapin kindly volunteered to occupy the same chamber with her, and administer to her wants during the night. About five o'clock in the morning, she found herself seriously ill, and it was quickly ascertained that her disease was the cholera. Medical aid was immediately called, but it soon became apparent that her cure was hopeless. While the terrible malady was doing its work, she was composed and submissive, and occupied alternately in supplicating God's sustaining grace, and leaving affectionate messages for her friends. She died at seven o'clock, on Thursday evening, before her husband or any of her absent friends were able to reach her.

For many years, she was exercised with doubts in regard to the divine authority of the Scriptures; but she set herself at length to an earnest and diligent examination of the subject, the result of which was a full conviction that Christianity had a divine origin. This conviction gradually worked itself into the heart; and her views and affections from that time had evidently an upward tendency. She made a public profession of religion in May, 1840. She had much more than ordinary strength of mind, and had thought and read much on theological subjects, but she was too quiet and and unostentatious to make any display of either her talents or her knowledge. Her heart and hand were open to every good work.— (Extracts from note to Dr. Sprague's Sermon.)

Mrs. Rachel, his widow, d. Sept. 24, 1856. In early life he was a school teacher. Soon after the death of Judge Chapin, the following Obituary notice was published.

“Died, in Prattsburgh, on the 10th inst., Hon. Ezra Chapin, lately one of the Judges of Steuben Co., ae. 66 years. The decease of Judge Chapin is not only a severe affliction to his immediate relatives and personal friends, but a heavy public loss. He was a man of good education, of general intelligence, of sound sense, and of stern integrity. In the discharge of the various and important public trusts committed to him, from time to time, through the long period of his residence in the County, as well as in more private transactions of life, he was governed by such an evident and inflexible regard to moral principle, as to have secured the entire confidence and respect of his fellow citizens. In his domestic and social relations, he exemplified some of the rarest and most estimable qualities.

His bearing was at once commanding and kind, firm and familiar, intolerant and indulgent, just and generous—all that could be desired in a husband, father and friend. In the early part of the summer he began to decline, under an affection of the liver, and went gradually down to the grave, sustained in sickness and death by the blessed hope of the gospel."

SEVENTH GENERATION.

VII. HON. LORING DUDLEY CHAPIN, son of Reuben and Lucinda, b. at West Springfield, Dec. 2, 1798; m. Emeline Aurelia Thurber, at Providence, dau. of John and Freeloze Thurber.

Mr. Chapin took great interest in the Chapin Genealogy, and spent considerable time and means in gathering material for a complete genealogy of the Chapin family, and when he died, left the task to his son. He corresponded with Judge Morris of Springfield, who gave him many important facts in regard to the family, among others he traced his lineage to Dea. Samuel of Springfield, from whom he was the seventh generation. His father was Reuben who d. at North Providence, somewhere about 1835 or '36. Loring D. was sent to Philadelphia, where he was educated among the Quakers and where he remained from 12 to 20, when he returned to Hartford, and served an apprenticeship to the trade of a musical instrument maker. He subsequently removed to Providence, (where he m. Emeline Aurelia Thurber, daughter of John and Freeloze Thurber.) He followed the business of musical instrument maker until 1829, when he removed with his family to New York. He established a handsome business (for those times,) but retired from it in 1832 or '33. In 1836, he established with others the Native American party, in whose cause he spent all his time and much of his means. He edited several newspapers, among which were the N. Y. Sun, the National Banner and the American Advocate. In 1838, he was elected a member of the N. Y. State Legislature, by the American and Whig parties. He originated the bill authorizing the appointment of a Commissioner to proceed to Europe to seek for the records concerning the Colonial history of the State, and the following year was the most prominent candidate for the office, but his opposition to Seward on the School question lost him the appointment. He entered into the book business and continued therein until just previous to his death in 1846. He met with an accident by which he broke two ribs on the left side, just previous to taking his seat in the Assembly, and never being re-set, they pressed upon and prevented the due action of the heart, causing his death by ossification of the valves. He had been nominated the evening on which he died, by both the Whig and American parties as one of the Judges to revise the State Constitution. He was in some respects a remarkable man, and was eminent for his many virtues both of head and heart.

It is with great diffidence that the compiler has anything to say respecting himself ; but as he has requested information from others, perhaps it will be but justice to them to state some facts in regard to himself.

Orange resided with his father, on Chicopee street, until the death of his father, excepting occasional absences, one or two winters or parts of winters attending school, and five winters teaching school. After the death of his father, he removed to Willimansett village, Springfield, now Chicopee. Farmer, and practical Land Surveyor or Engineer. Has been Clerk of the Parish, Chicopee street, now first Congregational Society in the town of Chicopee, from 1821 to the present time, 1862, and Treasurer most of that time ; has been Deacon of the Church, Chicopee street, since 1840. Has had three Military commissions ; also has been Justice of the Peace for more than 30 years.

With what fidelity he has discharged his various duties, it is for his cotemporaries and the people of his acquaintance to decide.

HENRY ALEXANDER SYKES, of Suffield, Ct., grandson of Abiah (Chapin) Bliss, of Springfield, Mass., now Chicopee Centre.

“Died Dec. 13, 1860, ae. 50, of diphtheria. During the prevalence in Suffield of the disease to which Dea. Sykes was a victim, the family of which he was the head, has been sadly afflicted. On the 5th of Dec., a daughter, its pride and flower, was taken. She came from the school at South Hadley, where she was a pupil, to her home to spend Thanksgiving. She was attacked by the disease, and after an illness of only five days, she died; followed quickly, and after an equally brief illness, by her father. He was by profession, an architect; and many handsome buildings, both public and private, in Springfield and adjoining towns, attest his skill. Six years ago, the degree of A. M. was conferred upon him by Amherst College. He was a zealous student of history, and the results of his research into the early times of his own town, are referred to with pride by his townsmen. On the 16th of September, 1858, he delivered an interesting Historical Address at Suffield, on occasion of the 150th anniversary of the decease of the Rev. Benjamin Ruggles, first pastor of the first Congregational church there. This address, with the proceedings of the day, has been published. His sound judgment, united to a kind and affable demeanor, made him respected and beloved, as a townsman and as a friend. For several years he was a Deacon of the Congregational Church.”—Relig. Herald, Hartford, Dec. 27, 1860, and The New England His. and Genealogical Register, April 1861.

PART IV.

A CENTENNIAL DISCOURSE,

DELIVERED BEFORE THE

FIRST CONGREGATIONAL SOCIETY IN CHICOPEE,

SEPTEMBER 26, 1852.

BY E. B. CLARK,

Pastor of the Church, which was Organized Sept. 27, 1752.

PUBLISHED BY REQUEST OF THE PARISHIONERS.

DISCOURSE.

ISAIAH LIX: 21.

“As for me, this is my covenant with them saith the Lord: my spirit that is upon them, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed’s seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever.”

THE great means of perpetuating the institutions of religion, are God’s Word and Spirit. These He grants to his people in such measures as they are prepared to receive and improve. The pious parent, taking the word of God as his rule of life, regards it as above all price, and he teaches it faithfully to his children, invoking the divine blessing upon his labors. For he knows that without the aid of the Holy Spirit, the good seed of the word will not spring up and grow; he is therefore no less anxious to secure the Spirit’s aid, than to sow the seed. And thus through the agency of the Spirit, and faithful parental training, the promises of God are secured, and piety is handed down through successive generations.

It is therefore one of the greatest blessings, to have a pious ancestry, the influence of whose prayers and godly life reach down to the latest generations. Thus it is, that God by His Word and Spirit perpetuates the institutions of religion through the line of his people. And it is a remarkably interesting fact, that most of those who are sincerely and truly pious, had a devoted ancestry. They have been trained up in a christian family by those who themselves were familiar with the family altar in childhood, and were regularly led to the house of God on the Sabbath. We shall find these remarks confirmed by the investigation which we are about to make into the history of this people.

It is always interesting to gather up the relics of the past, and place ourselves for the time, amid the scenes and circumstances in which our fathers lived and died. We thus place the past and present side by side, and are qualified to judge of the progress of events, to sympathise with our fathers in their privations and labors, and honor them for their deeds of virtue and valor.

It was early in the spring of 1636, that Wm. Pynchon, Esq., Henry Smith, John Burr, and others, came from Roxbury to the Connecticut river, and settled with their families in Agawam, which is now Springfield. The original settlement retained the name of Agawam till April 16th, 1640, when the inhabitants, in a general meeting, ordained that thereafter it should be called Springfield.

The limits of the town, by various purchases of the Indians, were not very definitely fixed, but comprised a territory of nearly twenty-five miles square, embracing West Springfield, Westfield, Southwick, Suffield, Enfield, Longmeadow, Somers, Wilbraham, and Ludlow. But the settlement was for many years confined chiefly to the village of Springfield. Those pioneers came not into the wilderness to escape from the restraints nor the burden of supporting religious institutions, for it was only the next year after the arrival of the first families, that a Christian Church was gathered, and Rev. George Moxon settled over it in the ministry.

With the surrounding Indian tribes our fathers lived on terms of the utmost cordiality and friendship. All the lands that came into their possession, were purchased fairly and honorably, and to the entire satisfaction of the natives, who harbored no feelings of hostility to the English.

As an evidence of this, is the following interesting circumstance.

In 1637, the next year after the first families arrived and established themselves on the present site of Springfield, occurred the Pequot war, to defray the expenses of which, this colony, together with those at Windsor and Hartford, was very heavily taxed. Consequently, the next winter being one of uncommon severity, the three colonies were reduced to a state of alarming distress.

“In this emergency, three men were sent among the Indians above, in search of bread stuffs; and their mission was entirely successful. On that occasion, our river exhibited a spectacle, never before, certainly never since, seen upon its waters. A fleet of fifty canoes laden with corn, the product of the rich meadows of Pocompuck, was at once launched upon the stream and borne onward by the force of the current, and urged forward by the powerful arm of the red man, and carried instant relief to the half starved, suffering strangers.”

Such was the friendly state of feeling existing between the English and Indians in those early days. Our fathers came among them not to defraud and expel them as enemies, but to live with them on terms of equality, to teach them habits of industry, to traffic with them, and do them good.

Thus the white man and the red man lived as neighbors and friends for forty years. In 1675, the whole scene was changed; the hour had arrived in which the momentous question was to be settled, whether the whites were to be extirpated from the land of their adoption, or the red men subdued, and scattered and driven from the place of their fathers' sepulchers.

By the agency of Phillip of Pokanoket, the youngest son of Massasoit, a union was formed for a "general rising of the natives to sweep the hated intruders from the ancient hunting grounds of the Indian race."

Among others, the colony at Springfield was marked for the slaughter, and so artfully the treacherous plot was laid, that destruction must have been the result, but for a timely warning from their friends at Windsor. Aroused by the alarm of impending danger, they fled in consternation to the forts, and were saved with the exception of two men and one woman. The savages pillaged the town, and committed twenty-nine houses and nearly as many barns to the flames, and destroyed all the mills. It was in the month of October; crops had been gathered in, and the winter stores of the colonists were swept away as in a moment.

Thus amid the ashes of their dwellings, and the destruction of their gathered harvests, the colonists looked with fearful apprehension upon the approaching winter. But a merciful God, who stays His rough wind in the day of the east wind, so ordered that the winter was uncommonly mild, and the stores that escaped the flames supplied the need of the colonists.

In the midst of these dark and terrific scenes, was the family of Dea. Samuel Chapin,* who died Nov. 11th, 1675, in a single month after the burning of Springfield. Deacon Chapin came from England or Wales, and arrived at Springfield with his family (of four sons and two daughters) at an early period, and became a leading man in the town. Another daughter was born in Springfield, in 1644, so that his arrival must have been at a previous date. In the year 1664, 28 years after the settlement of Springfield, two of the sons of Dea. Samuel Chapin, Japhet and Henry, married. Henry married Bethia, daughter of Benjamin Cooley of Longmeadow, and Japhet was married the preceding July, to Abilene, daughter of Samuel Cooley of Milford. After remaining a few years in the village of Springfield, the two brothers removed to this northern section of the town. I have not been able to ascertain the precise year of their settlement, nor whether they both came in the same year.

* Deacon Chapin was the ancestor of nearly all the Chapins in this country.

In 1666, two years after the marriage of these two sons, Deacon Samuel purchased of Mr. John Pynchon, a large tract of land, embracing most of the river flats lying between the Chicopee River and Willimansett brook, or Wallamansick as it was then spelt.

In the month of April, 1673, Samuel, the father, deeded to his son Japhet, a large portion of the tract which he had purchased of Major Pynchon. And the probability is that about this time the two brothers removed to this section of the town, as pioneers in the wilderness.

About 180 years ago, our now beautiful and highly cultivated plain was a howling wilderness. Here was the undisturbed lair of the wild beast, and the savage warrior found a safe retreat from his pursuers in the tangled thicket. Hither the two brothers, Japhet and Henry, came and planted themselves down in the midst of the forest. Except a house on the south side of Chicopee River, their nearest neighbors lived in the village of Springfield.

Japhet built his house at the north end of what is now Chicopee Street, a little north, and west of the house now owned by Mr. Ogden, on the next lower offset, where he had a charming view of the river and the hills on the opposite shore. Henry located somewhere toward the lower end of the street. They together at that time owned most of the land lying between Chicopee River and Willimansett brook, and extending some distance eastward on to the plain.

These men had been faithfully trained up from their childhood in the ways of virtue and religion by their pious father, and evinced in their lives that these parental labors were not in vain. For though the house of God was nearly six miles distant, through a pathless wilderness, and across the unbridged river, the return of each Sabbath-day found these men punctually in their places in the house of God. Japhet particularly was distinguished for his devoted piety. And he had need of piety to sustain him amid the heavy trials that awaited him; for a daughter was to be carried captive by the merciless savages. The days of peace and friendship with the Indians, which had continued for forty years, were passed away, so that the red man was now a constant source of fear and alarm to our fathers. Their fire-arms for defense were their constant companions in the field and by the way, and they went even to the house of God on the Sabbath, "as when one goeth down to the battle."

Hannah, the second daughter of Japhet, married John Sheldon of Deerfield, Dec. 3d, 1703, and removed to that frontier town, and lived in the house of his father, Capt. John Sheldon. On the night of the 29th of the next February, in a little less than three months after the marriage, occurred one of those terrific scenes which no tongue can adequately describe. That evening the happy villagers of that town retired to rest with the usual prospect of a quiet night, but they were aroused from their midnight slumbers, by the war cry of the savages, to behold their buildings in flames, and themselves in captivity. Being unable to force the door of Capt. Sheldon's house, the Indians made a hole with their hatchets, and thrusting in a musket, fired and killed the Captain's wife. The son and wife leaped from the chamber window to make their escape, by which effort she sprained her ancle and was taken captive, while he escaped.

The prisoners, numbering 112, among whom were Hannah, wife of John Sheldon, and Rev. John Williams, pastor of the church, and his family, were taken to Canada, and after about two years were redeemed.

Religion was a needful antidote to the anguish of a father's heart, as he thought of his daughter in captivity.

About this time Japhet received a sympathising letter from his brother in Mendon, comforting him under his afflictions, which letter I here present entire—verbatim et literatim.

mendon, April 8th, 1704.

Deare Brother :

I cannot with my pen express the concernness of sperit that is in me for you and my deare cusen that is led captive by the barbarous heathen. god is by such dispensations trying the faith and patience of his children, it is therefore my dayly request that god will support her in body and sperit and her bodely captivity may prove to her speretual enlargment, and that god wil please to give you comfort in hope, knowing that god is able to find out a way for escape, tho no way appears to us. as abraham being called to offer up his Son Isaac, who did it willingly knowing that god was able to rais him from the dead. these afflictions arise not out of the dust, but there is a cause, we are redy to complaine of the french and Indian enemis, but they are not the cause, but as it was sometime said to Jerusalem, yower wais and yower doings hath procured these things to thyself. So may new england say that our sins have brought the Sword of the wildeness upon us. I do therefore believe there must be a general Reformation before the rod of god will be taken off from us. Brother I long to see you, and did intend to have given you a visit this month, but multitud of busnis publik and pirtiqueler throngs me so that I have no prospect of coming this spring, though I cannot come to see you yeat I shall be glad to heare from you by all oppertunities thorow the little time that is remaining to us heare, and that our prayers may dayly meet at the thron of grace and that we may so demeane ourselves heare that at last we may have a joyeful meting in the kingdom of glorey, so with kind love and Respects to yowerself and my sister, wish my love to all my eusens I Rest yower loving brother, Josiah Chapin.

After the death of Japhet Chapin, in 1712, the children received a lengthy letter from Rev. John Williams, of Deerfield, instructing them concerning the improvement which they should make of his death, and speaking of him as having been a man of great piety. This letter, the record states, was in the hands of Deacon Edward Chapin before he died.

Japhet left six sons, Samuel, Thomas, John, Ebenezer, David, and Jonathan, all of whom were settled along on the street, near to each other. Henry Chapin left but two sons, Henry and Benjamin.

I have not been able to ascertain the locality of the house of the father, nor that of either of the sons. I think that Henry built south of the Chicopee, and Benjamin on the north side.

Although a few others came in and settled here from time to time, still for many years the Chapin families occupied nearly the whole territory. In 1753 there were 27 persons taxed as belonging to this parish, and 20 out of the whole 27 were Chapins.

The 8 sons of Japhet and Henry Chapin had each large families, amounting in all to 87 children. Samuel had 10, Thomas 11, John 8, Ebenezer 13, 11 sons—David 12, 10 sons—Jonathan 11, Henry 10, and Benjamin 12, making to Henry Chapin 22 grand-children, and to Japhet 65, from their sons alone.

Here these men lived and trained up their numerous families, toiling for their daily bread through the week, and taking those who could go to the distant sanctuary on the Sabbath. All but one of these 8 sons of Japhet and Henry, lived to be more than three score years and ten—the youngest was 64 and the oldest 95 when he died. These all became old men, and saw their numerous children settled around them, and their children's children rising up on every side, when all the religious privileges they enjoyed aside from those of the family altar, were obtained by going to the distant center of the town on the Sabbath.

Of course with the greatest exertions on their part, with no means of conveyance but horses on which they rode, but a small portion of this community could visit the public sanctuary on the sabbath. Many of the women, the little children and the feeble, must necessarily spend the long hours of their sabbath days at home. And thus, with no sabbath schools and books of religious instruction but the Bible, unless it might be the New England Primer, and by the reverence for the holy day which prevailed in those early times, and the strictness with which they were accustomed to observe it, the sabbath day must have been long and tedious to the young families of our fathers. And yet, notwithstanding all the disadvantages under which they lived, from the character of the men that were thus trained, we have no question that on every pleasant sabbath morning a large company from the settlement north of the Chicopee were present in the old meeting-house in Springfield.

“For (I quote from an old record bearing date 1743,) it is considered disorderly for persons to be away from home, and absent from the stated worship of the families, and religious meetings, unless it be in very extraordinary cases.”

I seem to see them now, the fathers, mothers and children, some on foot, and some mounted on their well trained horses, wending their way soberly and seriously through the tall forests that overshadow their lone pathway, till they reach the house of God. There they bow in reverence, and offer their prayers and praises, listen to instruction from the oracles of God, and return at evening to ponder the truths they have heard, and reduce them to practice in the daily avocations of life.

But these good men were not content to remain with the rising generation around them so far away from the privileges of the sanctuary; hence in the spring of 1750, they applied to the General Court, and received on the 10th of June, 1751, an act of incorporation as the 5th parish of Springfield. The first parish meeting was called on the 13th day of July following. Another meeting was held in August, at which time the first steps were taken toward building a meeting-house, and another in October following with reference to obtaining a Pastor. And not trusting to their own wisdom, they reverently applied to the Association for advice respecting a candidate for settlement.

This advice was obtained, and accordingly the services of Mr. John McKinstry were engaged for a quarter of a year. Having preached for them the stipulated time, at another parish meeting on the 7th of January, 1752, Mr. McKinstry received a unanimous call to settle with them in the gospel Ministry, but the negotiations respecting the salary continued till the 7th of the next June, when all those matters were arranged, and the time of the Ordination was voted to be on the 9th day of the next September. The New Style was adopted by Great Britain in 1752, calling the 3d of Sept. the 14th, omitting eleven days, so that during that year there was no 9th of Sept. And it has been ascertained from notes left by a member of the Council, that the ordination of Mr. McKinstry actually took place on the 27th of Sept. The question arises, whether the Church was organized on the day of Ordination, or at a previous day. It would seem that the Church must have been formed at a previous day, and from an old diary kept, as I suppose, by Deacon Edward Chapin, this opinion might be confirmed, which is the following: "March 15, 1752. This day the Rev. Mr. Breck administered the Lord's supper to us in the 5th parish."

I also find among the old papers a Church list, bearing date of June, 1752, containing 43 names, and the tax assessed upon each one for defraying the expenses of the communion. From all this we should naturally infer that the church was organized before this time. And yet in all the parish votes, and in the communication which the parish received from the Association approving their doings in giving Mr. McKinstry a call, there is no mention of a Church, and no intimation that such a distinct organization existed. Neither is there an intimation of any action of the Church as a distinct body, till the day the pastor was settled. I therefore conclude that the Church was organized on the same day of the ordination, which was the 27th of Sept., 1752; and as nearly as I can ascertain consisted of 43 members. Some of these were living on the west side of the Connecticut, as the parish then embraced all the northern part of the town of W. Springfield. All but eleven of the 43, are Chapins. The Pastor's salary was to be gradually increased for four years, from £49 6s. 8d. to £62 13s. 4d. and thus it was to remain. One half of the salary was to be paid in lawful money, and the other half in grain at the market price. In addition to this, he was to have, as the parish first voted, 20 cords of good merchantable wood. Then it was voted that they add one cord a year till it reached 30 cords, and that was to be ever after the fixed amount of wood. Subsequently it was voted, that the worthy Mr. McKinstry shall be always provided with a sufficiency of firewood.

According to a parish vote of June 24th, the 27th of August was observed as a day of fasting and prayer, to implore the divine blessing and assistance in reference to the occasion of settling their minister. The clergymen convened on the occasion, were Rev. Messrs. Stephen Williams of Longmeadow, Samuel Hopkins of W. Springfield, Peter Raynolds of Enfield, Ct., Robert Breck of Springfield, Noah Merrick of Wilbraham, and John McKinstry of Ellington, Ct., the father of the candidate.

All but one of the six sons of Japhet Chapin, and both the sons of Henry, were living at this time, and their names with one exception (Ebenezer,) I find on the church record.

At the time of the ordination, the meeting-house was in an unfinished state. It was raised "on the 5th of June, 1752, through the indulgence of heaven, with great joy and safety." And in December following, at a parish meeting, it was "Voted, to cover the outside of the meeting-house with quarter boards, to glaze all the windows, to do the plastering overhead, and to finish the lower part of the house." Such being the state of the house, they were of course unable to meet in it for the present.

On the next November, 1753, all things were ready, the new meeting-house was completed, and agreeable to the customs of those early days, a committee was chosen in parish meeting to perform the delicate and responsible duty of seating the meeting-house, with liberty duly granted by vote. to seat men and women together. The rule of seating was the last tax list. The usual custom at a later day, was to go by the age and list. This custom of seating a house of worship by a committee, has passed away, never to return. I can find no intimation that there was anything like a public dedication of the house; but as these old men, bending with age, the sons of Japhet and Henry, assembled at the roll of the drum, and entered these courts of the Lord, to unite in the solemnities of public worship, and felt that at last they had secured a tabernacle for the Lord in their midst, where He might record His name, and a minister to break unto them and to their posterity the bread of life, their pious hearts were jubilant with praise to God, for His loving kindness to them and to their children; and thus those humble courts were solemnly and sincerely dedicated to the Lord.

Benjamin, son of Henry, and David, son of Japhet, each 70 years of age, were elected deacons of the church. After three years, Dea. Benjamin went to his rest, at the age of 73, but Dea. David lived and served his generation for 20 years longer, and after an illness of a single week, slept with the fathers at the age of 90 years, in 1772. He was evidently a man greatly beloved and venerated, and was eminently devoted and useful to the last, a pillar indeed in the Church of God. It was said of him by a poet of that day, "speaking freely of the patriarch David,"

"He was an Israelite indeed,
 In whom there was no guile;
 His reason and his mental powers
 Did service to him give,
 And to his friends and kindred near,
 Almost while he did live,
 Sometime before he left this world,
 It was his good desire,
 That he no longer should abide,
 Than service would require;
 And as this was his holy wish,
 He had his sweet request;
 And by an illness very short,
 Went peacefully to rest."

Dea. Sam'l Cooper was probably elected to the office to fill the place of Dea. Benjamin Chapin, but all that we know of him is that he lived on the west side of the Connecticut River. Though Dea. David Chapin had finished his course and gone to his rest, and the church mourned for him as for a father, yet he had left among them a deep and visible impress of his sincere and devoted piety. His son Edward was 28 years of age when the father died; he was elected Dea., took his father's mantle and bore it 28 years, and died in 1800, at the age of 76. It was during his life that the parish was divided, and the portion on the west side of the river became a separate parish in 1786.

Three years after the division of the parish, by which it was much weakened, and the pastor becoming old and infirm, a mutual council was called, and a new arrangement was made between him and his people.

By that arrangement, Mr. McKinstry was to retain his pastoral relation to the Church and Society, but he was to preach, administer the ordinances, solemnize marriages, attend funerals, and visit the sick, as he might be invited, and was to receive a salary of £18 and 15 cords of wood during his life ; provided, however, another minister was settled over the parish, this sum was to be reduced to £12 a year. For some cause the salary was not promptly paid, and the pastor had claims on the parish for old arrearages, that ran back for years before the division took place ; and those of the new parish on the west side of the river, felt that by the division, they were released from all obligations to their former Pastor, and refused, or were reluctant to pay their proportion of these arrearages. Hence followed a long and bitter controversy, producing alienation, and greatly weakening the parish in numbers and ability. After he relinquished preaching, Mr. McKinstry lived for 24 years, and died Nov. 9, 1813, aged 90 years. So long as he was able, he met with the people on the Sabbath, gave out the hymns and led in the devotional services, while a sermon was read by some other person. Dr. Lathrop of West Springfield, preached his funeral sermon from Gen. 25 : 8. "Then Abraham gave up the ghost and died in a good old age, an old man and full of years."

Of him the Dr. thus speaks :

"Mr. McKinstry was a man of good natural talents, a respectable scholar, and sound divine. His preaching, though it suffered some disadvantage from the feebleness of his delivery, yet was edifying to his stated hearers. He was a man of exemplary piety, of a candid spirit, of a modest, humble disposition, of great resignation under trials, of steady, unwavering patience under long continued infirmities, and of christian fortitude and hope in view of approaching dissolution."

Thirteen years previous to the death of his Pastor, Dea. Edward Chapin fell asleep. From what I can gather of his character as a parent, a citizen, and a christian, I have no hesitation in pronouncing him a burning and a shining light. For many years he was the clerk of the parish, was chairman of committees for the transaction of their most difficult and delicate business, from time to time, and was the principal man in the church ; the comforter of the afflicted, a guide to the enquiring, and an example to all in christian zeal, faith, and purity of life.

A letter has fallen into my hands, which Dea. Edward wrote to his son Edward when in the army, bearing date 28th Aug. 1777, which is a most interesting and valuable relic of the man. In grammatical construction, purity of diction, in penmanship, and the sentiments of elevated, pure, simple piety, and parental tenderness with which it abounds, it shows that he was not only a christian, a father who was deeply solicitous for the spiritual good of his children, and a true patriot, but a very intelligent man for that day.

The house in which he lived, and where he brought up his family, is still standing on the east side of the way, and the first south of the meeting-house. His son, the late Dr. Calvin Chapin, graduated at Yale College in 1788, was for a time tutor in College, studied theology, and settled in the parish of Rocky Hill, Wethersfield, Ct., where he labored the remainder of his life, a very distinguished and valuable minister of the gospel. For many years he was a member of the college corporation, and the Recording Secretary of the American Board.

The Rev. Aaron L. Chapin, now President of Beloit College, Wis., is the grandson of Aaron, who was the eldest son of Dea. Edward, and who lived in Hartford. None of the descendants of Dea. Edward's family are remaining here. When he died, it was indeed a dark and gloomy day for this church, for its main earthly pillar was then removed, and utter extinction seemed inevitable. For eleven years they had already been without an officiating pastor, death was making inroads upon the members of the church, the additions were very few, and ruin seemed to be at the door.

In 1804, the number of male members of the church was only 7; there were a few more females, but altogether they were indeed a little band, without a preacher or deacon, without indeed a leading member to take charge of their meetings, for Mr. McKinstry had now become very old, and very infirm. But in the Lord there was still a friend, one who remembered His Zion, even in her weakness, and who in mercy directed hither the feet of one who was willing to take and to bear responsibility for his Lord and Master. A valuable accession to this little band of believers was made in the person of Dr. Amos Skeele, who being a professional man and a devoted christian, removed from Somers to this place in 1804. Mr. Caleb Pendleton moved into the place and united with the church about the same time; he was a good reader, and aided them much. But still this was one of the waste places of Zion.

The number was so small that were willing to be taxed for the support of the gospel, that after doing all they could, together with the little help they received from the Missionary Society, they could hire preaching but a small portion of the year, and on Dr. Skeele and Mr. Pendleton devolved the responsibility of conducting religious worship the rest of the time.

Mr. Skeele was chosen to the office of Deacon about eight years after his removal to this place, so that for 12 years the church was destitute of even so much as an officer.

What a picture of desolation, poverty and gloom is presented in this part of our history! It is a cold and winter day—there is no bell to summon the community to the house of worship, and no signal to mark the hour of meeting. The wind howls around the old and shattered temple, playing wantonly with its loose and worn out covering, and forcing its way through crack and crevice and broken pane, as if in mockery at such attempts to resist its power. And there, without a fire, a dozen persons assemble, not to be charmed with the performances of a gifted and eloquent preacher, but to attend a deacon's meeting. A portion of scripture is read, a hymn given out, but there is no leader and they cannot sing; a prayer is offered and a sermon read. The few hearers are scattered over the house, shivering with the cold, and listening as devoutly as circumstances will permit. Another prayer is offered, and the morning service is closed.

In the P. M. they assemble again, just enough to make desolation desolate, go through with the services, and retire. And these meetings, thus conducted, were continued, not for two or three Sabbaths only, but a quarter part of the time for 35 years. For the last 10 years of his life, the burden was on Dea. Edward Chapin. And for nearly a quarter of a century did Dr. Skeele and his associates assemble in their dilapidated temple every Sabbath, and there they conducted the public worship of their covenant keeping God, according to the best of their ability. Indeed, at that time it was necessary for that little band to walk by faith, for there were no appearances, not so much as a cloud the bigness of a man's hand, that could afford them hope of better times to come. Yet in those days of weakness, and fear, and much trembling, these servants of the Lord faltered not, but to the best of their ability discharged the obligations that were laid so heavily upon them; and preacher or no preacher, the sanctuary was thrown open, and a worshipping assembly was gathered there every Sabbath; the waiting eyes of these few sheep were turned beseechingly unto the great Shepherd, and though they waited long, they waited not in vain. While these men were waiting, God was for years by His providence and grace, disciplining and preparing for them an under shepherd, who at the appointed time should come to them in the fullness of christian love, consecrated to his Master's service.

Mr. Alexander Phœnix was the son of a wealthy merchant in N. Y., graduated at Washington College, and devoted his attention to the legal profession. After a time, he laid aside his law books, and engaged in the mercantile business, but in this he was unsuccessful, and domestic afflictions pressed heavily upon him, till feeling that his way was hedged up on every side, he was led at last, like Saul of Tarsus, to enquire what the Lord would have him do ?

Though late in life, his mind was directed to the study of theology, that he might prepare himself to build up some one of the waste places in Zion. He became a preacher, and when in the earliest of his labors, his feet were directed to Chicopee, he was at once convinced that he had found the waste place in which he was to labor. And when Dea. Skeele and others received an intimation that Mr. Phœnix might be induced to settle with them, their joy was such as words could not express ; they were so few and feeble, and had been so long destitute of a pastor, that to have an evangelical, devoted minister settled over them, was more than they had even dared to expect, it was rather an object of hope. But it was even so. On the 28th of April, 1824, Mr. Alexander Phœnix was ordained and installed as pastor of this Church, which on that memorable day received indeed an ascension gift. This was the dawn of brighter days. The people flocked to the house of God, and listened with joy to the message of grace, as the new pastor opened and pressed home the truth. For thirty-five years the church had been without an officiating Pastor. In a year and a half from this time, the new meeting-house was dedicated to the God of Israel, and the old one in which the fathers seventy-four years before had bowed and worshipped the covenant keeping God, was removed and devoted to a secular purpose.

Five years passed away, and then in 1831, that year of the right hand of God, that year of revivals beyond all others in modern days, when in all parts of New England such multitudes were brought into the kingdom of Christ, this church was not "left as a peace not rained upon." For here, too, the showers of grace descended, the church was revived and greatly strengthened in numbers and graces. A large proportion of the adults came out on the Lord's side, and a great moral change was visible in the whole aspect of society. There were about 40 additions made as the fruits of that revival, and during the whole of Mr. Phœnix's ministry, of eleven years, there were about 76 members added to the church.

A great debt of gratitude is due to Mr. Phœnix from this people, for his faithful and self-denying labors here, for he received but a nominal salary; being a man of wealth, he lived mostly from his own private means, while the church and parish gained strength and character every year. When he came, though the church was receiving aid from the Missionary Society, with all they could do they could support preaching but a quarter or half the time. But with their new pastor was added strength; the meeting-house was built, and the debt was paid, foreign aid to support the gospel was no longer needed, and the various causes of benevolence have received annually the contributions of this church and people. Thus was their ability increased by their effort to support the gospel ministry. Mr. Phœnix left when he felt that duty called him away, but still in the evening of his days he looks back upon those 11 years of his pastorate here as the happiest and most useful portion of his life. He had been the means of raising this church to a self-sustaining state, and had thus prepared the way for another pastor, and resigned the charge.

Blessings on his memory! The reward of a useful man will be his. Soon after Mr. Phœnix left, the Rev. E. B. Wright was installed as pastor of the church; but owing to his feeble health and often repeated request, the parish yielded to his wish, and he was dismissed in the spring of 1839, after a pastorate of $6\frac{1}{4}$ years. There were 11 additions to the church during his ministry. In Oct. of the same year, the present incumbent was inducted into the office of pastor over this flock, whose humble labors God has seen fit, in a measure, to bless.

The Lord has allowed us to enjoy frequent seasons of refreshing from His convicting and converting Spirit, so that during these thirteen years, 85 members have been added to the church, 56 of whom were received on profession, and the rest (29) by letter.

There are at present 85 members of the church, nearly half of whom are Chapins. Both Japhet and Henry are represented in their descendants, not only in the church, but in its officers. Dea. Orange Chapin, descending from Japhet through Thomas, and Dea. Giles S. Chapin from Henry, through Dea. Benjamin. And with the exception of about 35 years, between the death of Dea. Edward, when for some 12 years there was no Dea., and the appointment of Dea. Giles S. Chapin, one at least, and sometimes both of those church officers have borne the name of the honored and worthy fathers of this place, from the time of the organization of the church to the present day.

Since the organization of the church 100 years ago, great are the changes that have taken place. Then the country was new, and the conveniences and comforts of the people few and meager. The houses were unpainted, the yards unfenced, and their furniture and tools of rude construction. They were destitute of carriages of all kinds, but the ox cart, and money was exceedingly scarce.* What a contrast do we now behold in the air of neatness and comfort which everywhere appears around us, and within the humblest dwellings in our midst.

Then there was no sabbath school to draw the minds of children and youth to the oracles of God, and no religious books adapted to the capacities of children. But few persons could even write their names, and for mental improvement the advantages were small indeed, for their public schools lacked almost every thing but perseverance that was necessary to make them attractive and useful. Then a bible was so costly, that Japhet Chapin made provision in his will that a portion of his property should be appropriated to get each of his grand-children a bible. Now, the common day laborer may carry home four beautifully bound, clearly printed, elegant bibles in pay for a single day's work. The whole missionary enterprise has risen up since that time. We have frequently given more in a single year to the cause of benevolence than the whole of Mr. McKinstry's salary, although the parish is now reduced in its area to less than half its former size. I have no time to speak of the changes that have taken place around us, though the Chicopee and the Connecticut have been pressed into the service of man, and the tramp of the iron horse is hourly heard, dashing across our plain with his mighty train, and the lightnings tell us the news of the day.

But one lesson I would have deeply impressed upon our minds, and that is, gratitude, not only to those good men who planted these institutions, but to those who, at a later day in trial, and in deep poverty, clung for years to the sanctuary and the institutions of religion with a death grasp, and thus handed down to us the precious blessings of a living church. To them no sacrifice seemed too great to secure and transmit to their children the blessings of the sanctuary. A view of their toils, sacrifices, and self-denials, should cause

* As an evidence of the scarcity of money, I find an old church record containing the names of the church members in 1752, in 1753, in 1754, in 1756, and 1757, and a regular tax of sixpence was annually assessed upon each member to defray the communion expenses, and even this was too heavy for some to pay, as it appears from the fact that the names of nine persons are placed by themselves as being behind in their taxes for the year 1756. From 1757 onward for more than half a century, I can find no church record, and no evidence that one was kept.

our hearts to cluster around the stated means of grace, the institutions of religion with warmer affection, and lead us to strive the more to make them minister to our good. A great debt of gratitude is due to their memory for the precious influence which comes down to us from them—and let their descendants ever cherish toward them the deepest emotions of veneration and affection.

From this history we learn how intimately connected is the support of religious institutions with the temporal as well as spiritual good of the people. No community can afford to live without the sabbath and sanctuary privileges. We see as in letters of light, that godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of this life that now is, and of that which is to come. May God deeply impress this lesson upon our minds, and in emulating the virtues of our fathers, may we be able by grace to transfer to future generations these same gospel institutions in their purity and moral power.

As we have thus glanced over the history of the church, many places appear where the members might erect their Ebenezer and say with emphasis, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us;" while under all the circumstances, the present existence of this church is a monument of the faithfulness of God to His covenant with His humble and confiding children, and an illustration of the truth of the text, "My word shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seed's seed saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever."

APPENDIX.

The following letter is an exact copy of the original, capital letters, punctuation, spelling, and all, with the exception of a few paragraphs omitted. This and that of Josiah Chapin, together with many other valuable and interesting papers, were found by the author of this discourse in an old chest in a neighbor's garret.

Springfield Thursday 28 Aug. 1777.

Dear Son

After long waiting for intelligence from you to know where to direct a Letter & still receiving none as yet, what has become of the Post we expected we know not, or what part you are ordered to or where stationed, I no longer refrain from writing hoping a few lines may find way to you by some means or other. Part of the Militia being called for; Capt. Ephraim Chapin is preparing to march soon to the Northward, I expect to send this by him or Seba Bemont who goes his waiter, hoping proper care will be taken to know where your Regnt is & send this to you, for I conclude there is communication open from North to South as yet, but how soon it may be otherwise we know not, for it seems that the Continental officers are expert in Runing to the amazement and confusion of those that trusted in them. You can hardly conceive what a shock it gave us at home when we heard that Ticoudaroga with the stores & everything was left to the Enemy without so much as trying to defend it. Such vast expense of labor and cost to build and store it, & all thrown away in an hour! *Confusion on somebody!—but this is according to the language & ideas of this vain World. Let us now raise our thoughts to a Divine Superintending Providence, that governs all the affairs of Men, and we shall remember that vast armies have been destroyed & imense treasures lost from time to time in ages past, when a covenant professing people forsook the Law & broke the just command of a Holy God,—how like to this is our case. It seems that as we have persisted in walking contrary to God, that God is determined to walk contrary to us (as he declared to the Jews of old by the mouth of his prophets) until we think on our way, & return unto him by penitent confession of and heartily forsaking our sins. This is no discouraging consideration neither, for it will remain an everlasting truth (which the prophet of old was directed to proclaim) Say unto the righteous it shall be well with him. Of what importance must it then be to every individual person to secure an interest in the Divine favor in such a day of dark and gloomy aspects as the present day is. Is it not enough to astonish and even confound any thinking person to see such numbers in military Array for the Defence of our Religion and Liberties and at the same time by their Impious Language and practices provoking and even

* On the 5th of July preceding the date of this letter, Ticouderoga was surrendered by the Americans under General St. Clair, to the British commander, General Burgoyne.

Daring Heaven's whole Artillery to Discharge upon this Guilty Land in heaviest vollies. Certainly it may be said to the Wicked it shall go ill with him. But notwithstanding all the gloomy aspects we are under there is ground of hope; for the foundation remaineth sure, he that repenteth and forsaketh his sin shall find mercy. It would seem as if a merciful God was not only waiting for our return to him, but most earnestly inviting us thereto; by sundry kind interpositions of his Providence in the great plenty of the fruits of the Earth for our sustenance, the successful Battle at Fort Stanwix and also at Bennington.

* * * * *

Perhaps you may have heard before this that cousin Lieut. Israel Chapin very narrowly escaped Death and Captivity In the Battle near Ti—when Sergt. Nathan Chapin and Gideon Chapin were Captivated; with sundry others belonging to Springfield. But Sergt. Nathan behaved himself so steadily and honest amongst them that he embraced a very fair opportunity to bring off nine with him, they did not like to wait (it seems) for an exchange of prisoners they being ordered to go in a boat to Crown Point to mow their grass for them, and having only one inhabitant in the boat with them; they entertained him so generously with a bottle of Rum (which they were allowed to carry for their own refreshment while mowing) that he fell into a very sound sleep, upon which they rowed the boat to a port of their own choosing and left their pilot to finish his nap in the boat, and advanced with a quick step homeward. The Sergt arrived home this day fortnight in health, tho much fatigued which gave us all great joy, he behaved valiantly in the fight, Discreetly when in captivity and Courageously in the arduous undertaking of making his escape. * * * *

As his escape was in answer to fervent prayers I hope it is acknowledged with gratitude to the great Arbitor of all Events.

My Dear Dear Child I want to tell you something of the trying disappointments which have happened to me relating to your situation and to begin with my meeting you at Worcester in so weak a state if I could have gained the consent of the two gentlemen with whom I was going to court I should have turned about and helped you home, but that was not to be had—then I wrote a letter and sent giving advice for the recovery of your health, but that you did not receive. I made haste homeward with full expectation of finding you there, but to my great grief found you gone 3 days before my arrival; & what wounded me very sensibly was that you was so unfit on account of your weak state, and yet could not have time to stay a few days to recruit your health at home. I thought of following after to bring you back, but when I considered how far you might have got I despaired of overtaking you, and then my only relief in that anxiety for your welfare was to recommend you to God and his grace.

* * * * *

And blessed be God for the consolation afforded upon the rect of your little Letter of the 24 June, which was much more welcome to us than a thirty Dollar Bill could have been. There you express yourself in the most comforting language when you profess to put your trust in the Lord, and we hope you may not be deceived in so important a matter—and indeed it is the crown of our wishes for you and our daily prayers that you may be enabled by divine grace so to trust in the Lord as to dwell secure from fear of evil. Those and only those are safe who do truly trust in the Lord, be sure, take heed you dont deceive yourself in so important a matter I am very sensible of the need you stand in of Divine special Grace to enable you to resist the snares and temptations you are surrounded with, and would therefore charge you again with the most affectionate tenderness to stand fast in the Faith of Divine Revelation for the truths therein recorded are firmer than mountains of brass, and will remain forever. My son if sinners entice thee consent thou not. * * You may be sure that you are daily and repeatedly remembered at the Throne of Grace, dont be wanting on your part in working out your salvation. It gives me joy to think and hope that you have engaged in the arduous, necessary joyful work—if you have indeed fixed your trust in the Lord, you are safe and we are happy—Farewell.

This with the love of your Mama Brothers and Sister comes from your affectionate Father

PART V.

AN

DELIVERED AT THE

OPENING OF THE TOWN HALL IN SPRINGFIELD,

MARCH 24, 1828,

CONTAINING

SKETCHES OF THE EARLY HISTORY OF THAT TOWN, AND THOSE IN ITS VICINITY.

WITH AN APPENDIX.

BY GEORGE BLISS.

PUBLISHED AT THE REQUEST OF THE TOWN.

ADDRESS.

OUR assembling this day, in this Hall, is a subject for mutual congratulation. That the town has, with so much unanimity and concord, undertaken and completed a building, so convenient for the transaction of public business, evinces in the inhabitants, a spirit of liberality and harmony, highly honorable to our society. This building, so ornamental to the place, has been completed without accident and without contention.* The occasion suggested a wish to have an historical account of the town. Such a history will, probably, be peculiarly interesting to the inhabitants; but it is also important to the community in general. This was the earliest settlement, in the western part of the State, and itself the parent of many others. It was a colony from the settlements about Massachusetts Bay, begun and carried on while those settlements were yet in infancy. It was an important post against the Indians; and being adjacent to Connecticut, and the only town bordering on that colony, it was long involved in great and violent disputes with that government.

The means of compiling such an account are not over ample; but some care has been taken to collect what remains. Many facts now known, may soon be lost; many which might have been found half a century ago, are now irrecoverably gone. Very few traces of the ecclesiastical history of the town can be found.

Several of those who were here at the first settlement came from England, when the governor and company came over, in the year 1630. How many I am unable to ascertain.

William Pynchon, Esq. who may properly be called the father of the town, was one of the patentees in the colony charter, named in the deed of 1627, and the charter of 1628. He was appointed a magistrate and assistant in Oct. 1629, in England, when the governor and other officers were appointed. He came from England with governor Winthrop, and first settled at Roxbury. The number who then came to Massachusetts, cannot be given; but it is said there were 2000 in 1630, and in 1633, a large addition, bringing with them several distinguished ministers.

The discovery of Connecticut river, was, probably, not made so early as that of some other streams less important, owing to Long Island stretching along before its mouth. But in 1631, a bark which had been to the south, sailed up the river some distance. The Plymouth colony had sent to build a trading house, and the Dutch began a settlement at Hartford. But it is said, that the first dwelling house built on the river, by an European, was at the mouth of Windsor Little river, by William Holmes, in Oct. 1633.

The information given of the favorable situation of that river, induced many of the inhabitants about Boston, to make strenuous efforts to remove. The General Court had prohibited any persons removing without their consent. This prohibition was grounded on their being engaged in a joint undertaking, to make improvements for the common benefit; and if every one were at liberty to desert it when he pleased, it might not only prevent a beneficial improvement, but endanger the lives of those who remained. For one or two years, applications to remove to the Connecticut, were unsuccessful; but this did not hinder exploring parties from going out and making arrangements for settlements. This was the case in regard to Wethersfield, Hartford and Windsor. There is a tradition, that some of those that came to Wethersfield, in the year 1634, remained through the winter.

Early in the year 1635, the people of Watertown, and Dorchester, and afterwards those at Newton, obtained the consent of the General Court, that they should remove to the Connecticut river. In May, 1635, Mr. Pynchon, and the inhabitants of Roxbury, had also liberty granted them to remove themselves to any place that they should think meet, not to prejudice any other plantation, provided they continued under the government of Massachusetts. A similar condition was annexed to the leave given to the other towns. In the latter part of the year 1635, the Dorchester people, with their minister, Mr. Wareham, came to Mattaneang, at first called Dorchester, and afterwards Windsor. Those from Newtown, or Cambridge, came to Suekiang, called by them Newton, and since Hartford; those from Watertown, to Pauquiaang, called Watertown, now Wethersfield.

In the same year, Mr. Pynchon, Henry Smith, Jehu Burr, and probably, some others, came to this place, called by the Indians Aggawam, and began to build a house on the west side of the river, on the Aggawam, in the meadow, called from that fact House-meadow.* The Indians, seeing this, and being perfectly friendly, informed them that the house would be exposed to the flood, and they abandoned it, and came and built a house on the east side of the river; probably, on the lot afterwards owned by Mr. Pynchon, and still possessed by his descendants. It is supposed they returned to Roxbury in the fall. Mr. Pynchon, at the spring election after, was chosen a magistrate, as he had been years before; but it is noted on the record, that he was absent at the time of election.

In the spring of the year 1636, Mr. Pynchon, with a number of other persons, with their families, removed from Roxbury, and came to this place. How long they were on the journey, or in what course they came, is now unknown. It is mentioned that some that went from Hartford, in the winter before, were ten days in getting to Boston. It is not easy for those who dwell at ease, and are in the enjoyment of civilized society, and the various domestic comforts which we possess, to conceive of the difficulties, perplexities, and distresses, attending a new settlement, among hordes of savages and wild beasts, at a distance of a hundred miles from civilized society, and a wilderness, interspersed with mountains, rivers, ponds, and marshes, intervening. It is rare that new settlers go a great distance without having something of a road by land or water. It is not common that they put themselves so far from neighbors. Ordinarily they continue under the protection of a government able and willing to repel aggression and redress their wrongs.

When Mr. Pynchon, and those who accompanied him, came here, they made an agreement, the original of which is in the first book of records of the town, subscribed by them. It is dated May 14, 1636, and consists of fifteen articles. The first of which provides for the settlement of a minister. The second limits the number of families to forty, and not to exceed fifty. The other articles provide for the rule and mode of division, and defraying the expenses of the settlement.† This agreement has the signature of only eight persons, though there is internal evidence that there were twelve concerned. The names of those who subscribed it are, William Pynchon, Matthew Mitchell, Henry Smith, Jehu Burr, William Blake, Edmund Wood, Thomas Ufford, and John Cabell. Jehu Burr and Thomas Ufford, did not write, but made their mark. The other four who were united with them were, Thomas Woodford, John Reader, Samuel Butterfield, and James Wood. It is worthy of remark, that not one of the first adventurers died here ; and, I believe, none but Mr. Pynchon left descendants here. Several of them gave up their allotments to the company. This was the case with Blake, Ufford, Mitchell, the two Woods, Reader, and Butterfield. Burr remained here two or three years, and then removed into Connecticut. Cabell, in 1641, sold his lot to the town. Mr. Pynchon, in 1652, and Smith, in 1653, went to England, and died there.* All, except Pynchon, Smith, and Cabell, gave up their interest, and it was afterwards granted to other persons. The first allotment was so different from the actual settlement, that it is not easy to trace it.

It was of the first importance, situated as the early planters were, to prevent persons deserting the undertaking, while in its infant state, to guard against the admission of improper associates, and to prevent the property from accumulating in two or three hands. They, therefore, ordered, in January, 1638-9, that a person who had a lot, should not sell to one who was already provided. When a person was desirous of removing, he was bound to give the plantation notice ; and if they disallowed the sale he was about to make, the plantation was to take the lot, if they chose, at an appraisement. If no measures were taken after 10 days notice, the first bargain might proceed. In making the actual settlement, the following was the most general course : to allow each inhabitant a house lot on the west side of what is now called Main street, eight rods wide, from the street to the river ; a like width in the meadow, in front of his house, to the foot of the hill ; and a wood lot of the same breadth, extending, at first, eighty, and afterwards, an hundred rods, nearly to the top of the hill ; and, when practicable, an allotment in the interval on the west side of the river, of the same width, as near as might be directly against his lot. This was the ordinary course ; there were a few instances where the lots were wider ; but, I believe, only one narrower.†

The original limitation to fifty families, may seem strange and extraordinary to us, at this day. But it is apparent that those who made that agreement contemplated, at first, having their house lots all on the west side of the street, within the compass of two miles. When this limitation was made, the house lots were to be much wider than they afterwards established them. The marsh, or meadow, on the east side of the street was considered unfit for building ; and the upland east of it was reserved for wood lots. But the manner of cultivation is also to be considered; it was very different from that of the present day. It is very evident, from the early history, that it was extremely difficult and inconvenient for any considerable number to gain a subsistence together. They had very strong inducements, not only for their mutual accommodation, but more than that, for their self-defence and self-preservation, to keep in compact settlements. Yet, neither their fears, nor public prohibitions, could prevent their wandering and scattering themselves abroad. It may be stated, with truth, that to some, a roving, unsettled disposition, was a sufficient cause for wishing to remove. This, however, could not generally be the case. The manner of cultivation gives the only and full solution of the difficulty. They generally had their farms in common. Partition fences were a work of much labor and time. It is apparent, from the places selected for the first settlement, that the principal dependence was upon the intervals and cleared lands. They took only the natural grass for their cattle, and the land which was clear of timber, for their planting grounds. To fell the forests, and clear land for a crop of wheat or corn, was a work of much labor, and one to which they had been but rarely accustomed before their emigration. Potatoes, which now afford so much aid in a new settlement, were then unknown. Tradition has always represented the house lots as originally a birch plain. The above considerations unquestionably operated upon the first associates at this place.

When the settlement was made here, there were no white inhabitants on the east side of the river nearer, in any course in which they would travel, than Watertown. A settlement had, indeed, been begun at Concord, a short time before. On the west side of the river the only settlements were those towns which had been commenced the year before. These places, at first, bore the names of the towns which they respectively left.

The first settlers came, indeed, as did all the other plantations, under the license, and the professed authority and protection of Massachusetts; but they were so separated from the towns on the Bay, as to be obliged, principally, to rely on themselves. Agawam was at first united with the other towns below, on the river, as no distinction had been made in the license to remove; all being subject to the same restriction.

The license, in one instance, mentions towns, and in others plantations on Connecticut river. A joint commission for their government, for the term of one year, was made, containing regulations as to the mode of administering justice. In this commission there was a saving of the rights of those who had just obtained the patent of Connecticut.* It appears by the Connecticut record, that under this order, at a court holden at Newton, [Hartford] Nov. 1636, Mr. Pynchon was present, with the other magistrates. In the year 1637, Mr. Pynchon was again appointed, with Mr. Ludlow and others. In 1638, it is stated on the town record, that "there was a free choice according to the order from Mr. Ludlow, by the plantation, of two committys for the general court, to be holden at Hartford, April 4, 1638, and the partys chosen are Mr. George Moxon and Jehu Burr." And it appears that both Pynchon and Burr attended.

Agawam was also assessed with the towns in Connecticut, to furnish its quota of troops, and to pay a portion of the expense of the Pequot war. The number of men required of them, was seven, and the amount of tax they were to pay, was £86. 16s. sterling, the whole being £550. Dr. Trumbull, in his history of Connecticut, observes that this place did not furnish the troops, but paid the assessment. I should have come to a different conclusion, were it not for his authority. I find no evidence of any payment or assessment, on our records; and the Pynchon minute book gives no hint respecting either troops or money for that purpose. When the leave was given to come here, the General Court loaned to the adventurers certain military stores and ammunition, to be furnished by the towns of Watertown, Dorchester and Roxbury.†

This place did not long continue united with the other towns on the river. The three towns formed a voluntary constitution, in February, 1639, in which no mention is made of Agawam. The inhabitants of Agawam, believing themselves to be within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, Feb. 14, 1638, came into a voluntary agreement, and appointed William Pynchon, Esq. a magistrate, with extensive powers, and directed the proper course of proceeding, till they should receive orders from Massachusetts. This regulation most clearly shows the wisdom and prudence of the people, and is as pure a specimen of democratic legislation as is extant.‡ It has been suggested that Mr. Pynchon was dissatisfied with some proceedings at Hartford, in which he was personally concerned, and that he joined with Massachusetts on that account. I find no evidence of this; but I do find that the south line of the colony of Massachusetts had been run, and it was then supposed to be ascertained that the line passed between Springfield and Windsor. From the time of making the last mentioned order, Springfield continued within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, and sent deputies to the General Court, as the other towns did.

The original name of the place was Aggawam, or, as our ancestors sometimes wrote it, Agaam. There were several other places in the State which had the same Indian name. The most famous was Ipswich; and there were two in Plymouth colony. The precise signification of it, I know not; but finding that places bearing this name, are meadows, with a small river running through them, near to which they unite with larger waters, I am induced to conjecture it is indicative of its local situation. The name was changed from Aggawam to Springfield, by vote of the town, in general meeting, April 14, 1640. Hubbard, in his general history, states that the name was given out of regard to Mr. Pynchon, who had his mansion in a town of that name, near Chelmsford, in Essex, before he came to this country. Whatever be the origin, it is peculiarly appropriate. It is very rare that a place so abundantly watered with rivers, brooks, streams and springs, can be found.* The first appearance of the name upon the records of the General Court, is in 1641; before that it is spoken of as Aggawam. That name often occurs in the records of 1638, 39, and 40; afterwards it was always called and known by the name of Springfield, and no other.

Much uncertainty has existed as to the date of the incorporation of the town. When the Massachusetts Registers were first published, it was stated as 1635, or 1645, leaving it uncertain which was the true time. This was continued for several years. At length the latter date was exclusively fixed upon as if it had been discovered that the town was incorporated in 1645; and for several years that date has been generally adopted. I have repeatedly examined the public records of that period, with attention and care, and have not been able to discover a single fact occurring in 1645, which should induce the selection of that year, in preference to any other in that century. That such a mistake should occur, will not be thought very strange, for so far as I can find, there is not in print, anywhere, the incorporation of the most ancient towns. This is to the disgrace of the state. It has long been a complaint, that our ancient laws can hardly be found. Some of the general acts have, indeed, been repeatedly published, but many others were never printed. The record of incorporation of the oldest towns is extremely laconic. For example, it was "ordered that Aggawam shall be called Ipswich." "Trimountain is made a town by the name of Boston." "Wessaucusous shall be a town by the name of Newbury;" and persons were appointed to set out the bounds.

No regular act of incorporation, as they are now made, was given to any of the towns till long after the time of which we are now speaking, if any ever passed during the existence of the colonial government. In regard to Springfield, no such transaction of the General Court can be found, as, according to the practice of that day, could be called an incorporation. After searching thoroughly, in Massachusetts and Connecticut, I have come to the conclusion that the town never was incorporated. The settlement, for two or three years, united with the other towns in Connecticut, and sent deputies to the General Court. But it is styled in the Connecticut records, the plantation of Aggawam. If the general license, originally given to remove to the river and form settlements, called indiscriminately towns and plantations, and the authority given for their government, in which was included a direction as to the choice of constables, and prescribing their duty as town officers, can be deemed an act of incorporation, it ought to bear the date of the commission then given; but a license to settle anywhere on the river, can hardly be called an incorporation of a particular town or place.

It is probable that when the jurisdiction of Connecticut was renounced, and application made to Massachusetts for direction, it was made by the name of the town of Springfield, during the year 1640, and that its not having been made a town by the General Court, was not adverted to at the time. Very soon after, it was recognized as a town, sent deputies to the General Court, and conducted, and was treated, in all respects, as a town. The settlement was begun in 1636, and the place is recognized by the name of Springfield, by the General Court, in 1641. In 1647, additions were made to the town of Springfield. Were I to fix the date, it would be 1641; as from that time it was recognized by the name of the town of Springfield, by the Legislature. The mere vote as to the name, in 1640, ought not to affect this question.

The limits of the town were not originally better defined than the date of incorporation. The earliest notice I find on this subject, is an order of the plantation, bearing date January 3, 1638, appointing six men to set out the bounds of the plantation, on both sides of the river, and to mark the trees for the clearing of it. It may here be observed, once for all, that the dates in our ancient records begin the year the 22d of March. January, February, and the former part of March, are reckoned in the preceding year. Sometimes, instead of the heathen names of the months, they reckon 1, 2, 3, 4, and so on. In this case, they begin with April as the first. Counting the time by this rule, the order was January, 1639, as we reckon, and a return was made, describing the boundaries as follows: "We have laid out the boundaries of the plantation up the river, on the other side of the river, and the bounds are at a brook above the great meadow, which is about a quarter of a mile above ye mouth of Chicopee river. The brook in the long meadow, at the lower end, is the bounds southward, and the brook a little below, on the other side,—and the bounds that is set for gathering candlewood into the woods." The distance east and west is not mentioned in this order, or return; but the town claimed and exercised jurisdiction to the extent of five or six miles from the river. There is nothing on the records of the General Court, for the first ten years, as to the bounds of the town, though it is frequently mentioned as a town within the colony limits.

In the year 1647, the town petitioned to have the land at Freshwater, (now Enfield,) granted to them, and also to have Woronoco, (now Westfield.) And in that year the bounds of the town were greatly enlarged. It was ordered by the General Court, in March, 1647, that all the land east of Connecticut river, from the town of Springfield, down to the warehouse, which they built there, and twenty poles below the warehouse, should, for the present, belong to the town of Springfield. The warehouse was at Warehouse point, at a house occupied by John Bissell, nearly in the north line of Windsor. It was meant to include all the land within this colony, according to the measuring of Woodward and Saffery. Over this territory, Massachusetts claimed and exercised jurisdiction for a century from that date. The eastern boundary of that tract was also left wholly undefined.

In the autumn of the same year, another annexation was made of a very valuable tract of land, called Woronoco, including part of the towns of Suffield, Westfield, and Southwick. "October 27, 1647, Woronoco upon Connecticut river, within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts, is ordered to be, and reputed to be, a part of the town of Springfield, and liable to pay charges there, as others of the same town, till erecting another plantation, it shall be annexed thereto." By a subsequent order, Springfield was to adjoin Northampton and Hadley, and to extend eastward to the foot of the mountains, which meant the eastern base of the first mountains.

This territory included the towns of Westfield, Suffield, and a great part of Southwick, and the whole of West Springfield, on the west side of the river, and the towns of Springfield, Enfield, Somers, Wilbraham, Ludlow, and Longmeadow, on the east; and contained, according to the last census, a population of 21,531, and a territory nearly 25 miles square. The most of it was, at that time, in a wilderness state. One or more early establishments had been made at Woronoco. This was an important post for the beaver trade with the Indians. It was claimed both by Connecticut and Massachusetts. I believe there is no doubt both had trading houses there. The progressive settlement and division of this territory into towns and parishes, I shall notice hereafter.

One leading object of the first settlers, in coming to this place, was that they might have a settled minister, and unite in a church. Mr. Pynchon left his minister, Mr. Elliot, at Roxbury, and the towns in Connecticut brought ministers with them. But in a short time after he came, a minister was settled here, and a church gathered. The Rev. George Moxon was probably settled in the year 1637. He was in that year made a freeman, at Boston, and in April, 1638, was appointed a deputy, by this town, to go to Hartford. When he came from England, is not known. There are no early church records extant, but there is no reason to doubt that a church was gathered at the time of his coming here. Mr. Pynchon, and several others who were here then, were church members, and persons eminent for piety, and professedly designed to organize a church, without delay. The formation of the church has been, by some writers, I know not upon what authority, postponed to the year 1645, as the time of incorporation of the town was. This church was probably the fourteenth in Massachusetts.* After Mr. Moxon left Springfield, there was an interval of nearly nine years, in which they had not a settled minister. During that time they had several preachers, who stayed some time. With that exception, there have been, with very short interruptions, one or more settled ministers ever since Mr. Moxon came here.

In the year 1639, a house for Mr. Moxon was built, by a voluntary assessment. The house was 35 by 15 feet, with a porch and a study in it. The roof was thatched, and the cellar planked, instead of stone wall. Mr. Moxon had a grant of a house lot and other lands, as the other inhabitants had. His homelot was fourteen rods instead of eight. In the year 1645, a contract was made by the town, with Thomas Cooper, to build a meeting-house. The house was to be 40 feet long and 25 wide; to be 9 feet between joists, to be double studded, four large windows, two on each side, and one smaller one at each end; one large door at the south side, and two smaller doors; to have joists for a floor above, to be underpinned with stone; to shingle the roof, with two turrets, one for a bell, the other for a watch-house; for which he was to be paid fourscore pounds, [to be paid] in wheat, peas, pork, wampum, debts and labor. Each inhabitant was to furnish twenty days' work in all. The meeting-house was placed a rod or two northwest of the place where the store of Daniel Lombard now stands, and fronting to the south. A road, one rod wide, passed on the south side of it, to the training field, or burying ground. It is probable this was then the only house here with a shingled roof, or stone underpinning. A chamber floor was laid, and the chamber occupied for a store, by John Pynchon and others; but it seems, afterwards the floor was removed and a gallery made. Mr. Moxon's salary was at first forty pounds sterling, and paid by an annual tax.

As Springfield was on the borders of Connecticut, and for many years the only town bordering on that colony, and had once united with them, it was frequently claimed to belong there. There was, however, a more violent contest as to Woronoco. Mr. Fenwick, the governor of Saybrook, had established a trading house, and claimed it as within the patent of Connecticut. This, probably, embraced part of Southwick and Suffield, as well as Westfield. In making the grant to Springfield, it is called Woronoco upon Connecticut river. The controversy with Mr. Fenwick was carried on for several years. But as affecting Springfield, there arose a more serious and bitter controversy.

The patentees of the charter of Connecticut, had, about the time of the first settlement on the river, commenced a fort at Saybrook point, at the mouth of the river. They appointed John Winthrop, Jr., son of the first governor, their commander, and vested him with authority over the river. He claimed a toll from all passengers to aid in supporting the fort. This was exacted, not only from foreigners, but the inhabitants of the towns on the river. The towns below, sensible that they had settled on the lands of the proprietors of the fort, and were liable to be ousted by them, did not controvert the payment. The inhabitants of Springfield strenuously resisted payment, and when it was attempted to be enforced, they determined to have the full benefit of this great natural highway, and appealed to the General Court for assistance and protection. The General Court resolved that they were not bound to pay toll. The people in Connecticut, on the river, afterwards agreed to purchase the fort and the jurisdiction of the river, and also the claim against Springfield for the toll which had accrued before the purchase. The Saybrook government had subsisted independent of that on the river, for nearly ten years, when this purchase was made, which was December 5, 1644. The government of Connecticut claimed the toll which had accrued. This occasioned as great and famous a controversy between Massachusetts and Connecticut, as almost any in their history. It was long agitated before the commissioners of the united colonies. The arguments on both sides were learned and powerful. Not only the two colonies, but the whole four united colonies were finally engaged in the quarrel. The commissioners determined it was reasonable that Springfield should pay; but they resolved never to yield.

In order to test the principle of this decision, the General Court of Massachusetts ordered that all vessels belonging to the other colonies, should pay a certain toll upon entering the harbor of Boston. This was greatly resented, and seemed likely to break up the confederacy of the colonies. More urgent common danger induced all parties to suspend their controversy, which, I believe, was never resumed. The conduct of Massachusetts has been very severely blamed by Connecticut historians, and is spoken of with more disapprobation by Hutchinson, than I think it deserves. As to the right to the claim, it rests upon the same ground with that of Connecticut. Both of them were probably very impolitic; but both must stand or fall together.

The town increased rapidly, and the settlements extended in all directions, till an event took place which seemed likely greatly to check, if not to destroy it. Mr. Pyncheon had been employed in all public concerns, and had been a magistrate from 1636 to 1650, including the two or three years when the town was united with Connecticut. In the year 1650, he fell under the censure of the General Court, for having published a book, not in accordance with their sentiments, in some of its theological opinions in regard to the atonement. He was left out of the magistracy, and cited before them, and laid under heavy bonds. The next year, Mr. Pyncheon, in a letter addressed to the General Court, retracted his sentiments. The censure of him was suspended, but he was so much dissatisfied that he went to England, and Mr. Moxon went with him. Whether he approved Mr. Pynchon's book, is not known. Mr. Pynchon did not take his family, but Mr. Moxon did. Neither of them returned. Henry Smith, Mr. Pynchon's son-in-law, remained here a year, and then sold his property, and, with his family, removed to England, and remained there till he died.

Mr. Pynchon was a man of distinction, of eminent piety, and respectable talents. He appears to have had the confidence of the town while he remained. Henry Smith was a man of education, and was appointed a magistrate when Mr. Pynchon was left out. He was a good penman, and much employed in the affairs of the town.*

The loss of three such men could not but have been severely felt. But the absence of Mr. Pynchon was made up in his son, John Pynchon, who remained here. He was a man of uncommon talents, and admirably adapted to his situation. To mention no others, Deacon Samuel Chapin, and Elizur Holyoke, were well qualified for public business, and much employed in it.

The subject of the title to the land within the town, is one that ought not to be passed over. So far as the General Court could give a title, I think it may be fairly inferred that it has been done. In the establishment of the most ancient towns, there was no express grant of the right of soil. It seems to have been implied in the authority to be a town. By the colony laws of 1636, it was provided, that the freemen of every town, with such others as are allowed, shall have power to dispose of their own lands and woods, and to grant lots. The acts and doings of the General Court, having made this a town, gave the right to dispose of the land within it. The law provided that a record of such grants, and the bounds of each man's lot should be made, and a transcript of it sent to the General Court. In regard to Springfield, a special order was made of this import.

The general right of civilized man to appropriate to his use, a part of the land claimed by those who roam the forest in a savage state, I cannot here discuss; and I feel that, in the present case, there is no necessity for observations on the subject. The greater part of the land within the limits of the town, extensive as they were, was obtained by fair purchase from the Indians. There are several deeds on record. They were made to agents, in behalf of the town. The names of the grantors I shall not undertake to give. The first deed is dated July 15, 1636, though a bargain had been made before. This was Accomsiek, and all the ground on the side of Aggawam, except the ground then planted by the Indians; and also, all the ground on the east side of Quineaticott river, called Usquaiook Nayassett, reaching about four or five miles in length, from the north end of Massacksick, up to Chickuppe river, and also, Massacksick and grounds adjoining, reserving the ground then planted, and liberty to take fish and deer, ground nuts and acorns, and a kind of wild peas.* § The second deed is dated April 14, 1652, and conveys the land below Longmeadow, lying on Freshwater, at Enfield. A third deed was made June 20, 1666, of the right of those who gave it, to the land at Aggawam and Quana; and also, the higher meadow and uplands, from the mouth of Aggawam river, up to the ponds west of it; and all the land into the woods, where Ensign Cooper and Samuel Marshfield had a meadow. The fourth deed, made in the year 1674, was considerably more extensive. It contains, in the first place, a confirmation of the other deeds, from Longmeadow to Chicopee, as far east as the five mile pond, "which lyes by the bay path." The south bounds of the tract sold by said fourth deed, is "the riveret called Freshwater, on Asmentuck, including the meadows thereon, to its head, and thence eastward to the riveret called Scantick, up to the place where it comes down from the mountains, and including the meadows on both sides of Scantick. The foot of the mountains is the eastern boundary—northerly the Chickuppe river, and west the land first sold." Afterwards, March 16, 1680, a deed was made of the residue of Enfield, down to Saltonstall's brook, and to extend east eight miles. A deed was likewise made of Woronoke, June 3, 1669. Another deed was made of Suffield. Through the agency of John Pynchon, Esq., like purchases were made of Northampton and Hadley.

Some may ridicule the idea of purchasing of the Indians, but there is no reason to believe that they did not understand what was meant by a sale of land. These transactions were at different periods, from 1636, to 1680. They well understood what the English claimed by virtue of such sale. It appears that the town, as early as April 16, 1640, passed an order to restrain the Indians from breaking up any new grounds, or from planting that which was broken up the year before; and, as to the swamps in the neck, a part of the land first sold, that stakes should be set up, so that the Indians might be restrained from extending themselves farther. Mr. Moxon, Henry Smith, and Thomas Mirrick, were appointed a committee to execute the order.

The Indians received for these purchases more than what they sold was worth to them. I go farther, and agree with the judicious and pious historian of Connecticut, that our ancestors gave the full value, and more than the full value of their lands. Whoever is conversant with the hardships, toils and privations attending a new settlement in the wilderness, and will take the trouble to compute what is expended and laid out on and about a settlement, to make land produce anything—how much its value depends on neighboring settlements—on roads, fences, and the various improvements of civilized life—will inevitably come to the conclusion that wild land, in a wilderness, remote from neighbors, cannot be of much value. Lands in our new settlements, are worth but little now. And yet their value is very much enhanced by reference to other places already cleared and settled.

The people here taxed themselves to pay for purchases of the Indians. The first tax on record, except a voluntary one for Mr. Moxou's house, is one of £20 sterling, to pay Mr. Pynchon, in part, for the Indian purchase. This was May 6, 1644. Several grants were made afterwards, upon condition that the grantees should purchase the Indian title.

The administration of justice, as long as William Pynchon remained here, was under his direction. The first year after he came, he acted under the general commission given at the time of removing; then for two years under the associates at Connecticut; and for one or two years, by the order of the town, in town meeting; and from 1640 to 1650, under commissions given from time to time by the General Court. His authority as a magistrate was extensive in civil and criminal cases. He officiated as judge of probate, and tried causes. All trials were, however, by jury. The jury to consist of six men, when twelve could not be had. An appeal, upon giving bonds, might be had to the court at Boston. All capital trials were to be at Boston. November 6, 1648, the town, by vote, appointed that four courts should be holden in each year. The constable of the town was to execute all processes, and while there was no gaol, he was to confine persons in his custody, by imprisoning in irons. To supply the want of grand jurors, the town voted to choose two men annually, who were to be under oath, to present all offences to the magistrate, and all breaches of town or court orders. These were called presenters.

The authority given to the selectmen was, in some respects, different from what they now have. The following is the copy of the record of a vote, in the hand writing of William Pynchon. The hand is not easily read, and perhaps a word or two may be mistaken. "Springfield, the 26th of the 7th month, 1644.—It is this day agreed by general vote of the towne, that Henry Smith, Tho. Cooper, Samuel Chapin, Richard Sikes, and Henry Burt, shall have power to direct in all the prudential affairs of the towne, to prevent anything they shall judge to be to the damage of the towne, and to order any thing they shall judge to be for the good of the towne; and they or any three of the five shall have full power for a year's space; and what they or any three of them shall order, shall be of full power and virtue. Also to hear complaints, to arbitrate controversies, to lay out highways, to make bridges, repair highways, especially to order the making of the way over the muksy meadow, to see to the scouring of the ditches, and to the killing of wolves, and to the training up of the children in their good ruling, or any other thing they shall judge to be to the profit of the town." Mr. Pynchon's records are preserved, and in the hands of Edward Pynchon, Esq. There are many proceedings of the town recorded in his record book, and not found elsewhere.

After Mr. Pynchon was left out of the magistracy, Henry Smith had the same power which Mr. Pynchon had exercised. When Smith went to England, it was vested in three persons, of whom § John Pynchon was one. After Northampton and Hadley were settled, the commissioners of Springfield and Northampton united and held courts alternately here and at Northampton, until a county and county courts were established.

Drunkenness and lewdness seem, at that period, to have been not very uncommon. They were much more generally and more severely punished than they now are.

As this part of the country increased, the people determined to apply to the General Court to have a county established, and May

§ At the early age of ten years, John Pynchon came to Springfield with his father.

7, 1662, the western part of the state was made a county by the name of Hampshire. I have, on another occasion, inadvertently stated this to be in the year 1660. I know not that the law erecting the county is in print; I have never seen it. There were in the county only three towns, Springfield, Northampton, and Hadley. There were, however, a number of other settlements commenced, which a short time after were towns.

It is not in my power precisely to fix the time of the early settlements in the different parts of this town. Grants were not unfrequently made years before the land was occupied. Though they were recorded, the date of the grant or transfer is not given. The county records do not reach back far enough. Probably, the earliest settlement, except the homelots in the street, were in Longmeadow. This was not earlier than 1644, and not later than 1646. The first residents in Longmeadow were in the meadow, and not on the hill. Permission to build on the hill was not given till the year 1703, when the inhabitants, generally, built where the street and meeting-house now are. There were one or two early settlements at Skipmuck, probably the beginning of the year 1660. On Chicopee river, the first cultivation was begun on the south side of that river, and near its mouth. The oldest was in the year 1645.

It is very difficult to fix the time when the inhabitants began to build on the west side of the river. The land there was improved as a common field, as well before as after settlements were commenced. There were, as I believe, three distinct parts of West Springfield, occupied about the same time. One was south of Agawam river, begun by the ancestors of the Leonards and Coopers. Another was in the first parish under the hill; and a third on Chicopee plain, above. These commenced, as far as I can ascertain, in 1653, and soon rapidly increased and extended.

The first house built east of the town street, on the east side of the river, was Charles Ferry's, who had bought the east part of his father Harmon's meadow, and had, in 1661, a special license to build there, and his descendants own the place to this day.

While this town was thus increasing, a large tract of land above it was purchased of the Indians, through the agency of John Pynchon, Esq., including what is now Northampton, Hadley, and Hatfield. A flourishing settlement was commenced in Northampton in 1653. Soon after, the towns of Hadley and Hatfield were settled.*

* See Appendix L.

In the year 1655, settlements were begun at Freshwater, (now Enfield;) and in 1656, a considerably extensive allotment was made of lands at Woronoco, (Westfield.) In 1660, or 61, it seems, a settlement was commenced at Suffield.

An order was made, March 12, 1662, that there should be a highway laid out to the House of Correction, that is to be built on the meadow, and thence to the house that is next to Thompson's dingle; from which it appears that other settlements were then made or contemplated, on Maple street.

One or two of the first instances of prosecutions for witchcraft, arose from transactions in this town. The delusion on this subject was not then as great as it was afterwards. It was, indeed, the general belief of the age, that witchcraft and diabolical possession were not unfrequent. This was a capital offence, and tried before the Court of Assistants at Boston, and one of the cases afterwards came before the General Court. Hugh Parsons and Mary Parsons were prosecuted and finally acquitted of this offence. They lived at the lower end of Main street. The character and situation of their accusers, I have been unable to learn. There is nothing on our records on the subject.

In addition to the plantations before mentioned, Quabog, or Brookfield, had been purchased, and a settlement commenced there before 1673. I ought to have noticed Deerfield before. Another plantation was begun farther up the river, at a place called Squaukege, now Northfield.

The country had undoubtedly been to a considerable extent improved and cleared. The inhabitants of the county had greatly increased, as well in this town as others. The Indians could not but see with regret, the alterations that were making. Their planting, hunting, and fishing grounds were gradually diminished. King Philip saw, and felt this most sensibly, and was determined to make an effort for the entire extirpation of the English; and for that purpose made strenuous exertions to combine all the tribes of Indians in one confederacy. This he effected to a great extent. It is foreign from my purpose to give an account of the origin and progress of the Indian wars, any farther than this town and the settlements connected with it, were particularly affected.

When the English first came to this place, they were received by the Indians with friendship; and for nearly forty years, lived with them as neighbors, in harmony and peace. Occasionally, complaints were made of the misconduct of the Indians. They were, when complaints were substantiated, obliged to do right by their neighbors. On the other hand, it is evident, that when the Indians informed the magistrates of injurious treatment, prompt and speedy justice was done to them. It is evident that our ancestors did not undertake to apply and enforce their regulations upon the Indians living in a savage state, who had never acknowledged their jurisdiction.* The white inhabitants and Indians, residing so near to each other, must have had daily intercourse, and been familiarly acquainted.

In June, 1675, when Philip's war broke out, there was a general alarm. Many transactions occurred afterwards to excite suspicion, and this not merely in remote regions. Quabog, or Brookfield, was attacked and destroyed. Injury had been sustained at Northfield, Deerfield, Northampton, and Hatfield. It was understood that Philip himself was in this part of the country. What fortified places there were in the town, does not certainly appear. The old brick house, built by John Pynchon, Esq., before the year 1660, a great part of which is still standing, was used as a fort. The portico, and a part of the roof, have been removed. There is reason to believe there were one or two more forts south of the meeting-house. It has also been said, that the south part of the town was palisadoed; probably not so as to afford very great security. The Indians who were on this side of the river, had their principal settlement on Longhill, where they had a fort. The place was admirably adapted to prevent surprise, and was also well calculated for concealment. During the night of the third or fourth of October, three hundred of Philip's warriors were received into the fort, and there concealed by the Springfield Indians. Toto, a Windsor Indian, was informed of a plot to burn the town, and massacre the inhabitants. This he communicated to the people at Windsor, who, without delay, sent an express to give the alarm here. This, at first, occasioned great consternation. The people here betook themselves to the forts, and took such measures for security as they could, upon the emergency. The Springfield Indians, however, appeared as usual, professed cordial friendship, and in a great degree, quieted the fears and alarms of the English. The Rev. Mr. Glover, who, with others, had retired to the fort, and had removed his library, and some of his valuable effects, to Mr. Pynchon's, upon finding all to be quiet, and nothing heard or seen of an enemy, moved back his library to his own house. The Indians lay perfectly still and concealed. Some of the English, however, were not satisfied; and in the morning of October 5th, Lt. Thomas Cooper, and Thomas Miller, went out as scouts, to examine and explore the fort and Indian settlement. While advancing towards it, they were both fired upon and killed. Mr. Cooper, being very athletic and vigorous, got into one of the forts before he expired.

* The difficulties in regard to governing the Indians within the local limits of the colony, must have been sensibly felt, very early. A letter of Mr. Pynchon's to governor Dudley, and the proceedings of council thereon, published by the learned editor of Winthrop, in the appendix to the 2d volume, will show the sound principles which they adopted, leaving the independent tribes to their own laws and customs.

An assault upon the town immediately followed. Three men and one woman were killed, including the two above named. About thirty dwelling houses and twenty-five barns, were destroyed. The mills, and house of correction, or gaol, were also burnt; but the old meeting-house was preserved.

The Indians retreated before they had completed the work of destruction. That so few lives were lost, was very extraordinary. The colonial governments of Massachusetts and Connecticut had a considerable force in this quarter. But apprehending the danger to be farther north, they had established their head-quarters at Hadley, and no troops were then stationed here.

John Pynchon, Esq., who had been commander-in-chief in Massachusetts, had a day or two before, resigned the command. At his urgent request, Capt. Samuel Appleton had been appointed, and while in Massachusetts, according to the terms of the confederacy of the united colonies, would have the chief command. It is supposed Mr. Pynchon was at Hadley, when the attack took place. Major Treat, who commanded the Connecticut forces, received orders to march into Connecticut, to protect their towns. It has been supposed he was at Westfield, on his way, when the alarm was given; but it would seem by Appleton's letters, that he was left at Hadley, when Appleton came to Springfield with a large force, as he did, upon information of the attack. The Indians, however, retired, and the English forces were not able to come up with them, though they immediately pursued.

The dismay, horror, and confusion of such a scene as presented itself to our ancestors, we cannot conceive; but it may be more easily conceived than described. The most of the inhabitants, though conversant with the Indians, knew as little of war, and especially of Indian wars, as we do. They had known the Indians only as friends and peaceable neighbors. These circumstances give this attack all the shocking features of a civil war. The produce for the approaching winter had been gathered, and was destroyed. There are three original accounts of this transaction, which I have seen. The first is contained in a letter from John Pynchon, to his son, then in England; the second is the official report of Capt. Appleton to the governor; and the third, by Jonathan Burt, written in a blank leaf of a record book of the town. They all represent the distress and consternation as very great. They all breathe a spirit of piety, and an acknowledgment of the interposition of divine providence, not often to be found in these days. The whole accounts are interesting, but I must content myself with extracts. Mr. Pynchon writes as follows :

SPRINGFIELD, Oct. 20, 1675.

DEAR SON JOSEPH,—The sore contending of God with us, for our sins, and unthankfulness for former mercies, and unfruitfulness under our precious enjoyments, hath evidently demonstrated that he is very angry with this country. God having given the heathen a large commission to destroy his people, and exceeding havoc they made in this end of the country, destroying two or three great places above Northampton and Hadley, and lately they have fallen upon Springfield, and almost ruined it by burning of houses. About 30 or 32 dwelling houses all burnt down, and some twenty-five barns full of corn and hay. The Lord hath spared my dwelling house; but my barns and outhousing all burnt down, and all my corn and hay consumed; and not anything have I left of food either for man or beast. All my mills, both corn mills and saw mills, burnt down those at home in this town, and also those I had in other places.—So that God hath laid me low—I am really reduced to great straits.

* * * * *

How God may dispose of us I know not. We are yet here at Springfield. My house garrisoned with soldiers and full of troubles and hurries.—I am not able to afford you any help, but by my prayers, which I am always putting up for you; and as God shall enable shall be ready to do to my utmost otherwise. The Lord in mercy be good to you and us; how he may deal with us I know not. Where his Providence may cast me, whether to Boston, or further on, whether I may live to get out of this place, is only with himself.

The official letter of Mr. Appleton discloses some particulars not before published. It is addressed to governor Leverett, and dated October 12, 1675. He was at Hadley when he wrote. It contains the following :

“As to the state of poor desolate Springfield, to whose relief we came [though with a march that had put our men into a most violent sweat and was more than they could well bear,] too late. Their condition is indeed most afflicted, there being about thirty-three houses and twenty-five barns burnt, and about fifteen houses left unburnt. The people are full of fear, and staggering in their thoughts as to their keeping or leaving of the place. They whose houses and provisions are consumed, incline to leave the place as thinking they can better labour for a living in places of less danger than where they now are. Hence seem unwilling to stay except they might freely share in the corn and provision which is remaining and preserved by the sword. I cannot but think it conducive to the public, and for ought I see to the private interest, that the place should be kept; there being corn and provision enough and to spare for the sustenance of the persons whose number is considerable and cannot be maintained elsewhere without more than almost any place can afford to their relief. The worth of the place is also considerable and the holding of it will give encouragement and help to others and the quitting of it great discouragement and hazard to our passage from one place to another; it being so great a distance from Hadley to any other town on this side of the river. I have in regard of the present distress of the poor people adventured to leave Capt. Sill there to be ordered by the Hon'd. Maj'r. till further order.

In the account of Springfield houses we only presented the number of them on the east side of the river and that in the town platt for in all, on the west side and in the outskirts on the east side, there are about sixty houses standing and much corn in and about them.”

In another letter, dated October 17, 1675, he says: “By a letter from Major Pynchon, I am informed of an old Indian Squaw taken at Springfield, who tells that the Indians, who burnt that town, lodged about six miles of the town. Some men went forth, found twenty-four fires, and some plunder. She saith there came of the enemy 270, that the enemy are in all about 600. The place where they keep is at Coassitt as is supposed about fifty-six miles above Hadley.”

Mr. Burt's account is short. “On the 5th day of October, 1675, a day to be kept in memory of posterity, when the barbarous heathen made an assault on this poor towne, killed two men, and a woman and wounded several, one of which died soon after, burnt down 29 dwelling houses and barnes, and much corn and hay. But God did wonderfully preserve us, or we had been a prey to their teeth. God in his good providence, so ordered it that an Indian gave intelligence of the enemie's designs to fall on this towne, whereby we escaped with our lives for which we should give God the glory. Jonathan Burt an eye witness of the same."

A short time after this, October 14th, an attack was made upon Hatfield, but was soon repelled by Appleton's forces.

The council, in answer to Capt. Appleton's letter, by their communication dated October 15th, say: "We are very sensible of the great loss sustained at Springfield, and are of the same opinion with you that it is not advisable to have it deserted, and would hope that the inhabitants of almost one hundred houses would be able to defend the maine of the remainder while the enemy is abroad."

It has been supposed that Major Treat, with the Connecticut forces, was passing through Westfield, at the time of the attack on Springfield, and came to their relief. Appleton's official letter, however, is different. He says, in his letter of October 12th, already quoted, that upon a report of Indians lower down above Hartford he was, while I was absent, [when he came to Springfield] recalled by the council of Connecticut upon the eighth of this instant and is not yet returned, nor do I know how it is with him nor when he is like to return." If Treat had been at Springfield between the 5th and 12th, Appleton would have seen him, and mentioned the fact.

The people here were kept in fear, and frequently alarmed. No very extensive injury was done. Two or three persons were killed. At a later period, Skipmuck suffered considerably, and Benjamin Wright was taken captive. The people were so much disposed to abandon and desert their settlements, that Mr. Appleton found it necessary, by general orders, as commander-in-chief, to issue a proclamation, dated November 12th, 1675, to prohibit the inhabitants of Springfield, Westfield, Northampton, Hadley, and Hatfield, from removing, without liberty from him; and any person found without a pass signed by him, was to be taken up and confined. This prohibition was approved by the General Court.

An allowance was made by the General Court, to Springfield, by an abatement in the rates, for the great loss it had sustained, and the straights put to, of £150. Northampton was also abated £18 12s. 6d.; and Hadley £9 3s. 4d. Major Pynchon was remunerated £128 by him disbursed, and his expenses, £30. Notwithstanding the severe loss sustained from this attack of the Indians, the town evidently soon revived, and the number of inhabitants increased.

The treacherous conduct of the Indians here, led to their extermination. In the course of the war, many were undoubtedly destroyed. The most of the survivors, in the course of a few years, removed to the westward. A few, and but a few, remained, and disposed of their lands. The land on Longhill and on the side of Agawam meadows, was taken possession of by right of conquest. Longhill was then called Forthill, and was after this granted by the town, and English settlements formed there. Indeed, this was through the country, to a great extent, a war of extermination. The severity exercised by the government towards the Indians, especially those that remained peaceable, and did not unite with Philip, cannot be justified. Elliott, the Indian apostle, made great exertions to protect his praying, or christian Indians, but his efforts were to a great degree vain. The Indians and squaws were sent away, June 24, 1675. At first, they were placed upon certain islands, and afterwards, by an order of the General Court, passed May, 1677, those which were in Massachusetts proper, exclusive of Plymouth colony, were to be confined to four plantations: Natick, Punkepaug, (Stoughton,) Wassanemesit (Grafton,) and Wamesit (Tewksbury.) Gookin, in his accounts, enumerates in 1674, 1100. In Plymouth colony, they were more numerous and less rigorously treated. A vigilant superintendence was kept over them, after they were confined in those towns.

Seldom have any of the remnants of the Indians been seen here by any now living, unless when transiently passing through the town, from the west; and those that have been here were, probably, of the Mohegan, or Grafton tribes. Their degraded and miserable condition cannot fail to draw a sigh from every benevolent bosom.*

Before the Indians had been subdued, an enemy, in many respects more formidable, was setting itself in array against the colony. The king of England manifested a determination to sieze upon and vacate the charter. This had been several times threatened, but in the year 1683, a process of quo warranto was served. The consequence of a judgment in favor of the king, would have been to annul all proceedings under it, and to revest all the land within the colony, in the king's hands. But in order to quiet the people, and render the measure less unpopular, the process contained an express provision, that the private interests of individuals should be preserved, and no man receive any prejudice in his freehold or estate. Judgment was the next year given in favor of the Crown, and the charter vacated.

Before judgment was given upon the quo warranto, at least before it was known here, some important measures were taken in this and some other towns, to obviate the effect of annulling the charter. The town, though Enfield, Suffield, and Westfield, had been made separate towns, contained large quantities of common and undivided lands. These the town claimed to hold and dispose of, as they thought proper. Probably not one tenth part of the land had been sold or divided. None of the pine plains or hills had been granted. The tradition has always been, that the measure I am about to state was taken in order to make the property the estate of individuals, to protect it from seizure. In February, 1685, but dated 1684, the town, in full meeting, passed a vote, that all lands on the east boundaries of the town, through the whole length of it, from north to south, extending on the east side of the river, four miles west, and on the west side extending east to boundaries particularly named, should be, and thereby were, granted to each (then) present inhabitant, his heirs and assigns, forever, according to certain proportions then stated. This afterwards formed the outward commons, including the greater part of Wilbraham, and Ludlow, on the east, and a great part of West Springfield, on the west side of the river. The lands were to be laid out in five divisions, and every inhabitant to have an allotment in each of them. This was extremely inconvenient, and as between the different inhabitants of the town, a very impolitic and unjust division.* A man with a small property, would have assigned to him five lots, each three or four miles long, and perhaps only a rod wide.

It is hardly to be conceived that this course could have been pursued, had there not been some urgent and pressing necessity for it. Soon after this vote, the proprietors assumed the management of that land. The separate allotment of it was not completed for many years after; the last was in 1740. The records of these proprietors and their proceedings, are not in a good state of preservation. Probably, some of the original minutes may be lost. These lands lying so inconvenient to make farms, and it being very difficult to acquire all the titles, is, beyond question, a prominent reason for their being settled so much later than other parts of the town. At the time when the order above mentioned was made, it was in town meeting agreed, that all the common lands not included in the former vote, on both sides of the great river, should be to, or lie common to the [then] present inhabitants, their heirs and assigns forever; and not to be granted out at any time, but by the joint consent of the inhabitants, in town meeting, orderly called.

Resting upon this vote, the same persons who were made proprietors of the outward commons, undertook to hold meetings, and make grants of land, not in town meeting, but by the name of the proprietors of the inward commons. The town, indeed, after this, from time to time, granted out particular allotments, without opposition. In the year 1703, the town made extensive grants to the inhabitants of Longmeadow, on the town street, and of the lands east of it.

However, after some time, the proprietors of the inward commons, in 1721, proceeded to allot a part of the common lands, apportioning them by the rule given in the vote of 1685. This excluded from any share in them, those who had removed into the town after that period, though present at the time of division. Occasional complaints were made, and when they could not be stifled, the proprietors would make grants, to quiet troublesome individuals.

Perhaps it is not easy to determine what the precise meaning of the town was, by their vote. They meant to protect the land from forfeiture, and designed also, that it should remain common. After the inward common grants were made, the town confirmed and ratified their proceedings. The books of the proceedings of both sets of proprietors, so far as they are known to exist, are with the town clerk. A second allotment was made by the proprietors in 1740, by a new rule, embracing nearly 400 persons. A third was made in 1754, by a different ratio, and including 544 persons.

The exact situation of the land which the first settlers allotted here, before they altered it by cultivation, cannot be ascertained. As well from the appearance of the ground at present, as from the town records, it seems that the town brook, in its natural state, ran by the side of the meadows, through the town street, in the course in which it now runs. The vegetable matter dug up out of the meadow, shews that there was once a quantity of pine or hemlock timber, which covered the meadow east of the brook. Hemlock roots are now to be found in many parts of the meadow. There is a tradition that the land on the hill, westward of Goose pond, had a very large and heavy growth of oak timber upon it ; that very large timber for the first or second meeting-house, was cut therefrom. For many years past, it has given no evidence of having ever been oak or timber land. If it ever produced oak, the soil must have been greatly weakened and almost destroyed, by repeated burnings. But there is great reason to doubt whether the land near the town, was at first very heavily timbered. An early ordinance, made in 1647, for the preservation of the timber, notices the very great scarcity of timber for building, sawing, and for shingles, and prohibits the carrying it out of town, to any other place. The prohibition to extend from Chicopee river to Freshwater brook, and to extend from Connecticut river six miles east. It may be fairly inferred, that when this order was made, the growth on the plains was sparse.

I have already observed, that the manner of cultivating the cleared lands, was by throwing them into a common field, inclosing them with a general fence. This mode of cultivation, though probably the only one they could at first adopt, produced much dispute in regard to fences, cattle and swine. Some contending that cattle should be restrained to a later period, and others that they should go into the fields early in the season. Gates were set up and maintained on the three passages to the river, at the upper, middle, and lower wharves, and persons appointed to take charge of them. Common fields existed here before there were any statutes to regulate them.

I believe there is not under the colony charter, any record in the town books, of the choice of a deputy to the General Court. It is certain that they were generally chosen and attended. I have been at a loss to account for this omission. It is conjectured, however, that in this choice of a deputy, a magistrate presided. The Pynchons, father and son, were magistrates during the whole time. They presided in the election, and kept the record of the choice. In fact, I find that in Mr. Pynchon's record book, these elections are, some of them, entered. Many other proceedings of the town are to be found only in that book.

By the colony law, towns might choose a deputy either from their own town, or from another, and either for one session of the General Court, or for a year. This town, when there was no special reason for sending a member, elected one from Boston or its vicinity. By inspecting the records of the General Court, it appears that this was frequently the case. It is, therefore, not always to be inferred from a man's being a representative of the town, that he belonged to it.

It is apparent that the town considered the sending of a deputy every year, and twice a year, a burden. His expenses and his wages were to be paid by the town. There are charges in the accounts against the town, for a horse for the deputy to the Bay, and for horse keeping; also, for the deputy's diet, and his wages. On several occasions, leave was given by the Court, that he might be absent the second session. From the frequent recurrence of the grant of £4, for the deputy, I conjecture that this was the sum paid for one from Boston or its vicinity.

The municipal regulations which were very early adopted here, were very various and extensive. They embraced many things which were afterwards provided for by general statutes. In some cases they probably were but transcripts of the laws; and it is not always easy to separate those that were merely local, from those extending through the whole colony. The distance of this place from the seat of government at Boston, and the difficulty of access to it, made it more important that they should have a system of their own. These regulations were adopted from time to time, from their first fixing on this spot. They were reduced to a system February 5, 1650*; but the date on the record is 1649. As they improved their lands so extensively in common, without partition fences, which I have already noticed, many of their regulations relate to fences, to the time and manner of pasturing their cattle, and the preventing of damage by swine. Probably, these are not so interesting as some other parts of their bye-laws. Among their regulations, were three for security against fire; requiring each householder to have a ladder annexed to his house, to have his chimney swept at stated periods, and a general prohibition against carrying fire abroad uncovered; and penalties were annexed to the violation of these rules. Ignorant of their situation, on a cursory examination, we should, at the present day, be tempted to conclude they had been transcribed from the rules of some city, or populous town, without regard to the propriety of adopting them. But when the fact is known, that their houses and barns, and other buildings, were all covered with thatch, that their chimneys were wooden frames, covered with mortar, that girdled and dry trees, and wild thatch, and other wild grass, were scattered about their roads and fields, the urgency of such regulations will be very apparent. There are others, which, at this day, appear quite as extraordinary, but we may not have as good grounds to judge of their propriety; whereas, if we knew all the inducements to establish them, they might evince their wisdom and prudence.

While there were a very few inhabitants, (only thirteen names being mentioned) they built a house for the Rev. Mr. Moxon; and in March 20, 1638, passed the following order: "that in consideration of certayne charges which the present inhabitants have been at for Mr. Moxon's house, and fensing his lott such as shall for future tyme come to inhabite in ye place shall beare a share in the like charges in proportion with ourselves." It seems they considered this as a permanent benefit, and that those that came after them ought to bear a share of the burden.

Several of the very early regulations indicate an anxiety about the scarcity of timber. There is one which not only shows this, but also what extent they appropriated for settling lots. October 17, 1638, "it is ordered, [I presume by the selectmen,] with the consent of the plantation, that from this day forward noe trees shall be cut down, or taken away, by any man, in the compass of ground from the Mill river upward, to John Reader's lott [which by the original agreement was the most northerly,] which parsell of ground is appoynted for house lotts; and in case any man shall trespass, contrary to this order, he shall be liable to the fine of five shillings."

Some other of the early regulations will better show the state of society, than any description.

November 23, 1638. "It is ordered that a foot path and stiles be allowed at every man's lotts end next the greate river."

February 14, 1639. "It is ordered that it shall be lawful for any inhabitant to fell any canoe trees and make them for his own use or for the use of any inhabitant, yt grow on ye common but not to sell or any ways pass away any cannoe out of ye plantation untill it be five years old, and in case any shall transgress this order after this day he shall be lyable to a fine of twenty shillings."

"It is also ordered yt it shall be lawfull for any man to put over horse, cowes or younger cattell on the other side of the river at the first of November and to take them away thence on the 14th of April, and if any shall trespass this order he shall be lyable to pay any damadges that shall appear to be done by his cattayle."

"It is ordered that all yt have a ditch by the highway before their doors shall keep it well scoured for the ready passage of the water that it may not be pent up to flowe the meddowe." [The importance of this will appear, when it is considered that the settlement was on the margin of a marsh, and any obstruction in the water course would be extensively injurious.]

November 14, 1639. "It is mutually agreed on by the plantation that ye sealed Peck which Mr. Pynchon hath shall be the ordinary peck to bye and sell by in the plantation, and whoever will may repayre to the constable and have his peck sealed paying him 2d. for his labor with ye seal."

"It is also ordered, yt ye exercise of trayning shall be practiced one day in every month; and if occasions doe sometimes hinder then the like space of tyme shall be observed another tyme, though it be two days after one another. And yt this tyme of trayning is referred to ye discretion of Henry Smith, who is chosen by mutual consent to be Serjeant of the Company, who shall have power to choose a Corporal for his assistant. And whosoever shall absent himself without a lawful excuse, shall forfeit twelve pence, and yt all above 15 years of age shall be counted for soldiers and the time to begin the first Thursday in December next."

"It is also mutually agreed on, yt no person in this plantation, shall trade, give or lend to any Indian, any quantity of Powder, little or greate, under ye penalty of 40s. for any tyme, yt any person shall be found a transgressor, in this kind."

There are many regulations of wages and labor. The earliest as follows :

November 14, 1639. "It is also agreed for the ordering of laborers wages yt Carpenters shall have for 9 months 2s. 6d. per day and for three months from ye 10th of November to the 10th of February 2s. per day. Mowers shall have 2s. 6d. per day. Sawers 6s. 6d. per C ft. they to fall and hewe and the owner to bring to the pitt. Also for husbandry or any ordinary labor to have 2s. per day for 9 months, only from the 24th of April till the 24th of June they are left to their liberty as men can agree with them and for ye other 3 months, viz from November 10th till February 10th, to have 18d. per day."

The above shows that there were no saw-mills here, and it seems this was the case some years after; for a new order as to the wages of Sawyers, was made November 17, 1642: "For the ordering of Sawyers wages workmen of this nature shall saw henceforth at 3s. 8d. per C ft. for boards and 4s. 4d. per C ft. for slitworke, ye timber to be brought home to ye pit and hewn and made ready, and if said workmen shall sawe timber and sell the boards they shall not exceed the price of 5s. 6d. per C ft. provided that if the pit be made, within the place of distance, yt is betwixt Mr. Pynchons house and Samuel Wrights it shall be accounted as in the town."

The license to fell canoe trees, without the consent of the plantation, was annulled April 16, 1640; and a penalty of 20s. imposed for every tree felled without license.

May 1, 1645. It was "voted, with the consent of the plantation that whosoever shall take any mans canoe or vessel without his leave shall be lyable to the fine of 2s. 6d. for every such default."

January 8, 1646. "It is agreed by the plantation with John Matthews to beate the drum for the meetings for a years space at 10 of the clock on the lecture days and at 9 o'clock on the Lord's days, in the forenoons only, and he is to beate it from Mr. Moxons to R. Stebbins house, and ye meetings to begin within half an houre after, for which his payns he is to have 4d. in wampum of every family in the town, or a peck of Indian corn if they have not wampum."

The rule of allotting and dividing the lands in the town, before the year 1685, is no where laid down, except what is stated in the original agreement, in 1636. A power was, however, given to persons designated from time to time, to admit inhabitants, and to make allotments of lands, according to the original agreement. This must have been done, in very many instances, without being entered on the town records. In regard to the greater part of the original settlers on the town street, the only evidence of their title is in the record of the town recorder; and there is commonly neither the date of the grant nor the time of recording mentioned upon record. The entry is usually in this form: A. B. is by grant of the plantation, possessed of a house lot, 8 rods broad, and 80 rods long, extending from the street to the river, and of a piece of meadow opposite thereto, of equal breadth, extending east from the street, 40 rods, to the foot of the hill, and of a wood lot in the rear thereof, in the same direction, of the same breadth, extending east 80 rods; and also, of a lot over against his house lot, on the west side of the river, extending from the great river to Agawam river, all bounded on the north by C. D. and on the south by E. F.

There were about forty original house lots granted on the town street. I have taken some pains to ascertain the names of the original settlers, and the order of their allotments.* The grants were, probably, all made between the year 1636 and 1652. It is evident that many of those who had house lots were not here for several years after the first settlement. In two rates made January, 1639, there are only 13 assessed. Two years afterwards, allotments of planting grounds were made to 17 persons, and in 1643, there were 22. In 1646, 42 persons were assessed to pay for the purchase of the Indians, and there were 6 vacant lots also assessed. In 1656, there were 52 who had taken the oath of fidelity. In 1664, there were recorded as admitted inhabitants, 74 persons. These were all that were in the different parts of the town.*

When Mr. Moxon determined to leave the town, his real estate was purchased, and appropriated to the use of the ministry. After he left the country, many efforts were made to procure a settled minister. In the year 1655, the town voted that Mr. Thompson, "during his continuance a preaching minister in Springfield, should possess the ministry house and lot bought of Mr. Moxon, for the time he should continue among them, in dispensing the word of God, and carrying on the place of a preaching elder"; and to give him £50 a year, and to increase it to £60. At this time, an order was made that the rates should be assessed on the value of the property owned by each inhabitant. And further, it was concluded "that it is meete and requisite that every person should allow some maintenance to the ministry though not possessed of land or estate to rate him thereto, and therefore it was agreed that every person being at his own hand, and not a son or servant, who hath noe land or estate, or whose land or estate doth not amount to 5s. in the year in the rate, that every such person should be liable to pay to the ministers maintenance five shillings per annum."

The next year, Mr. Thompson left the place, and a committee was appointed to devise means to procure a minister; and in the meantime it was voted by the town, "that whereas Deacon Wright on the Lord's day was chosen to dispense the word of God in this place, till some other should be got for that work, that Deacon Wright should have for his labor in that employment 50s per month for such time as he attends on the work." Again, in November of the same year, a vote was passed "to allow Deacon Wright, Deacon Chapin, Mr. Holyoke, and Henry Burt £12 for their past services in the Lord's work on the Sabbath, to be distributed by the selectmen; and that in future they would allow at the rate of £50 a year,* till such time as they should have a settled minister, to be distributed and ordered by the selectmen."

A similar course was taken the next year; and Mr. Holyoke and Henry Burt were appointed to carry on the work of the Sabbath; and if they were disabled, Deacon Chapin was to supply their place. In November, 1657, Mr. Holyoke was made choice of, as the record expresses it, "to carry on the work of the Sabbath, once every Sabbath day, which he accepts of; Mr. Pynchon is made choice of for one part of the day, once a fortnight, which he will endeavor to attend, sometimes by reading notes, and sometimes by his own meditations, till March next." Deacon Chapin and Henry Burt were chosen "to carry on the other part of the day, once a fortnight, to be allowed at the rate of £40 a year."

In 1659, a Mr. Hooker was here as a preacher, and efforts were made to settle him, but without success. According to the date on the records, February, 1659, but evidently 1660, the Rev. Mr. Peletiah Glover was here as a minister, and the town voted him a salary of £60, if he would stay out the year. Mr. Glover remained here as the settled minister many years.

The above instances of designating lay exhorters, and agreeing to pay them for their services, are not very common, and would not be thought very regular at this time. In 1660, the town agreed that Mr. Glover should have the parsonage and £80 a year as a salary.

After Mr. Glover's house was burnt down by the Indians, the town built him a new one. It appears, by the items of charge, that brick were used for the chimney. The house was fortified, and, probably, the roof shingled. The cost of the house was £108. 15s. It is apparent from the records, that brick were made in the town; for mention is made in the year 1672, in a grant of land, of a reservation of the clay pits thereon, and of a passage to them. It is probable brick were first made here when Mr. Pynchon built his brick house which is now standing.‡ This was about the year 1660. That house, when first built, compared with those around it, must have appeared like some Baron's castle. The red freestone, which was so abundant in the eastern part of the town, was used in underpinning that house. It has been the tradition, that the use of that stone, and the manner of working it, was lost for nearly a century. The stone that was used for building and other purposes, was taken from the streams, and was very different from that brought from the plains.*

Before the town was burnt, it had been determined to build a new meeting-house. A place was designated for it further west than the first one stood. A contract was made for land for that purpose, with the owner of the house lot north of the old one, and the meeting-house was fixed very nearly in the place where the one which was removed in 1819, stood. It was not built till 1677. It was 50 by 40 feet, high enough for galleries, when they should be needed; was underpinned with stone, and cost about £400 of the currency at that time. It was fortified, as was the grist mill; and the town, for some years, kept a garrison in the latter. At this period, the style of building began very much to improve. Probably the houses erected after the Indians had burnt the town, were better built, though many of them were thatched. They were all with high peaked roofs, and when glass was used at all, it was the small diamond glass, set in lead.

Mr. Glover continued in the ministry here till his death. The record of his death is, "The Rev'd Peletiah Glover fell asleep in Jesus, March 29, 1692." The town very soon after, invited Mr. John Haines to be their minister; but though repeatedly urged, he declined to settle here. The town seems not to have been very successful in the settlement of a minister; but there are two things remarkable in their conduct. First, that they did not relax their efforts; and secondly, while destitute of a minister, they regularly and constantly had public worship.

Not succeeding with Mr. Haines, they passed the following vote: "Voted to send Captain Thomas Colton, and Serjeant Luke Hitchcock to the Bay for the procuring a minister, to preach the word of God to this town; and that they apply themselves to the Rev'd the President of the College, with the rest of the elders in Boston, for their help for the obtaining a minister that may promote conversion work among us." In consequence of this message, the Rev. Daniel Brewer, of Roxbury, came and was settled here in the year 1694.

For the regulation of society, and the promotion of good morals, the General Court, in 1675 and 1677, passed several laws, with a view of adopting the system of Alfred the Great, by directing tythingmen to be appointed in each town, who should each have the inspection of ten or twelve families, and prosecute for all transgressions of the laws within their several districts. Such officers were chosen in this town, their districts assigned them, and their duties enjoined by the county court. There were four tythings, or districts of that name, in the year 1678, within the bounds of the present town of Springfield; one in Longmeadow, and two in West Springfield. These tythingmen had not only to enforce the laws respecting the Sabbath, and licensed houses, and the use of spirituous liquors, but were to see that no person was abroad from home after nine o'clock at night. How strictly the duty enjoined them was performed, I have no means of ascertaining.

The sumptuary laws, which restrained and regulated the apparel and dress of the inhabitants, appear to have been very much disregarded. The court records are full of complaints, that the law against wearing silks was not enforced in this and some of the other towns.

While there were, apparently, great exertions made to oblige children to attend meeting on the Sabbath, and to behave with decency and reverence during the time of public worship, and no small pains were taken to prevent their being out at unseasonable hours, or in improper company, I have not been able to find that so much attention was paid to schooling, as I had expected. A tract of land at the lower end of Chicopee plain, on the west side of the great river, was appropriated by the town, in the year 1654, "either for the helping to maintain a schoolmaster or ruling elder, or to help bear any other town charges." This land was many years let out, and the income expended in schooling. One of the turrets of the meeting-house was sometime occupied for a school room. The first school house was built in 1679. The house was 22 feet by 17; the studs were $8\frac{1}{2}$ feet, and there was a chamber in it. From ten to twelve pounds were annually paid to a schoolmaster. The house was first erected in the way to the upper wharf; probably, with a view to accommodate scholars on the west side of the river, especially in the winter. This was afterwards removed, and rebuilt at the middle of the town, near where the first meeting-house stood, but on the spot on which Daniel Lombard's store now stands. §

Other schools were kept in the town, as the inhabitants increased in the different parts of it. An entry, of the following tenor, is made in the book of selectmen's orders, in the year 1682: "The selectmen agreed with Goodwife Mirrick to encourage her in the good work of training up children and teaching children to read that she should have 3d. a week for every child that she takes to perform this excellent work for." The defect of schooling, for the first forty years after the town was settled, is apparent, in the number of persons who could not write their names, and in the very great number of bad writers and spellers. From the commencement of the last century, provision has been made for supporting public schools; and with very short intermissions, a grammar school, as well as others, have been kept.

There is one other subject in the early history of the town, upon which information might be gratifying to the inhabitants—that of roads and bridges; and there is no one subject more involved in uncertainty. The town designated the selectmen, or other persons, to lay out highways and roads. For many years there was no county authority; and after county courts were established, the records for 30 or 40 years, are not to be found. A surveyor's compass was not used here for the first 60 or 70 years. The monuments referred to in laying the roads, were most of them perishable. It is, therefore, very difficult to trace an old road, unless it has been new laid. The road through the street is only incidentally mentioned. It seems to have been the starting point on which all the house lots were bounded. It was to extend from against Mr. Pynchon's, downwards, four rods from the east side of the brook, till the brook passes into the meadow, opposite the house of widow Marble. This road was continued to, and through the Longmeadow. At first, only 40 rods of ground were reserved for the meeting-house. In February, 1644, a purchase was made of two acres and a half, for a training place, which was afterwards appropriated for a burying ground, and is still used for that purpose; § and two rods were appropriated to go to the meeting-house. This was, from time to time, enlarged. A road of one and a half rods, at first, was made to the training place, which was soon increased to two rods, and afterwards farther widened. The passages through the meadow, east of the street, were difficult, and it was long before they became very good. At first, there was an order that a highway, two rods wide, should be laid out through the hassekey meadow, where State street now is.

Among the duties of the surveyors, is designated that of making a horse way across the meadow, to the bay path; and in the year

§ A rail-road now passes over said "burying ground," the remains of persons buried there having been removed to the new cemetery.

1648, it was "agreed by the town, that those who would join, to make a cart way there, should have liberty to bar it up, and to take 4d. a load of any that cart over that way who have not joined in making it."

I have not been able to find any trace of the laying out or making of the road to the Bay, as it was called, or the road to Boston. That what is called the old bay road was made and used very early, is very evident, from various occasional references to it, in the records.* It is worthy of remark, that all the roads at and near the centre of the settlement, were made very narrow; in some instances only two rods wide, and in no case exceeding four rods. But the roads at a distance from the settlement, were made, in several instances, twenty, in others ten, and in no case, less than eight rods wide. This is to be accounted for, only by a reference to their habits and customs. The streets in the centre were narrow, because they esteemed the land too valuable, or the difficulty of making wide roads too great, to be very broad; and the roads more remote were left wide to accommodate the inhabitants with pasturing. This reason is, in several instances, expressly assigned for laying the roads so broad. It was a part of their common law, whatever might be the opinion of courts and lawyers, that the inhabitants had a right to turn their cattle on to the commons and roads. It is not more than 40 or 50 years, since it was a very extensive practice for farmers to turn their cattle on to the commons in the spring, and to take them home in autumn. Usually, this was done at the opening of the common fields, in October.†

Before proceeding with the history of the town, it may be proper to notice the subject of the contest between Massachusetts and Connecticut, respecting certain parts of the town of Springfield. I have already stated that Enfield, Suffield, and Somers, were originally settled as a part of Springfield, and under Massachusetts jurisdiction. Not only these towns, but a considerable portion of Wilbraham, Longmeadow, West Springfield, and Southwick, were claimed by Connecticut. This claim was resisted on the part of Massachusetts. The state of the controversy has been very much misunderstood, and in some instances, much misrepresented by those who ought to have known better. The whole, however, having been now amicably adjusted between the two states, it is no further important than as matter of history; and it may be material that the conduct of those concerned should be vindicated from aspersion and misrepresentation.

* See Appendix O.

After various fruitless attempts, an agreement between the two state governments was made in 1713, that the charter line should be run in a way agreed upon; and that, let the charter line pass in one place or another, certain towns mentioned, which had been settled by Massachusetts, should belong to that province, and certain others to Connecticut; and that an equivalent should be given in other lands. As the line was then run, it took a part of what is now Wilbraham, Longmeadow, West Springfield, and Southwick, with all the lands south of them, into Connecticut; and the line according to the agreement was established, and monuments erected. This running was ratified, and Connecticut received a grant of equivalent lands, and sold them and received the avails, part of which constitute a portion of Yale college funds. This line, as thus ratified, was acquiesced in, and the jurisdiction over the purchased and ceded territory, continued as before, to be exercised by Massachusetts, till about the year 1748. At this period, the towns of Enfield, Suffield, and Somers, united with Connecticut. The claim of Massachusetts to them was formally renounced to Suffield, and a part of Southwick, in the year 1803; and her claim to the other part of Southwick, then in dispute, and also to the whole of West Springfield, was confirmed by Connecticut. On the east side of the river, the right to the towns of Somers and Enfield, was, in 1826, ceded to Connecticut, and the right to that part of Wilbraham and Longmeadow, which was south of the colony line, confirmed to Massachusetts. The most ancient grants of land in Enfield and Suffield, are to be found only in the records here and at Boston.

Having made such observations as have occurred to me, in relation to the more ancient regulations, I proceed with the history of the town.

Soon after the Rev. Mr. Brewer was settled here, the people on the west side of the river, feeling the inconvenience of passing the river in a boat, to meeting, upon application to the General Court in the year 1696, were incorporated as the second parish in Springfield, with a provision that the lands in the common field, should be taxed either in the first or second parish, as they were owned. Very soon afterwards they settled a minister, and built a meeting-house.

In the year 1713, Longmeadow was incorporated as a separate parish, by the name of the third parish, including all that part of the town south of a line running east from the mouth of Pecowsick.

In a short time afterwards, they proceeded to build a meeting-house, and in 1716, settled a minister.

Soon after the decease of the Rev. Mr. Brewer, the first parish, in 1734, voted to settle the Rev. Robert Breck. This measure created the most bitter and violent animosities. The majority of the church and people were warmly attached to him; a respectable minority in both, were very much opposed to him. The contest on the subject involved not only the clergy, far and near, but the civil authority of the county and of the province. The principal objections were to the correctness of Mr. Breck's theological sentiments. Most of the neighboring clergy were against him. After various attempts to procure his ordination, he was finally settled in the beginning of the year 1736. He published his confession of faith, in connection with Dr. Cooper's ordination sermon. Judging from that, and candor ought to induce a belief that he then published his real sentiments, it would seem that even strict Calvinists could not object to his creed. Those who were most active in opposing him, were soon reconciled, and many of them became his warm friends. During his long ministry, the church and parish were well united in him.

That part of the town which is now Wilbraham, was not improved so early as other parts not better for cultivation. This was owing, in some degree, at least, to the lots being laid out in such long and narrow strips. As far as I can learn, the first settlements were begun in 1731. They had so much increased, and so great was the distance from the centre of the old parish, that in 1740, they were incorporated as the fourth parish in Springfield. This parish embraced only the second and third divisions of the outward commons. It was commonly known by the name of the mountain parish, or Springfield mountains. In the year 1741, they settled a minister, and in 1748, built a meeting house.

In the year 1750, the first parish being about to build a new meeting house, the former one not being large enough, the people in the north part of the town, on both sides of Connecticut river, were incorporated into a separate parish, by the name of the fifth, or Chicopee parish. The general boundary on the east side of Connecticut river, was Chicopee river. In 1742, a minister was settled, and soon afterwards, a meeting house built in that parish, on the east side of the river. In the year 1757, the south west part of the town was made a parish, by the name of the sixth parish. This included what is now Aggawam, or Feedinghills; and in 1762, a minister was settled there. The same provision was then made with regard to the taxation of the lands in the meadows, or common field, as had been adopted when the second parish was incorporated.

In the year 1763, the eastern part of the town, including the mountain parish and half a mile west of it, was made a district by the name of Wilbraham, having all the powers of a town, excepting the privilege of sending a representative, in which they were to unite with Springfield.

For many years, the town had existed in great harmony, and as few local or sectional dissensions and jealousies appeared, in the transaction of public business, as are ever found. The public business was transacted at the centre of the first parish, and generally, the public officers chosen from the various parts of the town. The public town offices were all kept at the centre of the first parish. For some years, however, before the year 1773, it was apparent that the seeds of dissension were sown; and they sprung up from time to time. The method of dividing the school money, the plan of holding town meetings, and of keeping the grammar school, were subjects of contest. The parish of Longmeadow, and those on the west side of Connecticut river, united against the first parish. Chicopee was divided. In transacting the ordinary town business, parties were nearly balanced: commonly there was a small majority against the first parish. In choosing representatives, Wilbraham united with the first parish, and made a majority. Contention, whenever any efforts were made to transact town business, became constant and violent. For a year or two, the town meetings were holden on the west side of the river, and the town records kept there. In one instance, when the choice of municipal officers was attempted, after spending four days, only a part of them were chosen.

It was very evident that the inhabitants could not proceed harmoniously together. Probably, all parties were to blame. When a poll was required upon every vote, a permanent session, to transact the business commonly done in one day, would be requisite. Various proposals were made, and at length, at the recommendation of the more moderate and judicious, from the various parts of the town, a vote was passed to submit the case to three impartial and respectable men, from a distance. They were the Hon. Erastus Wolcott, of Windsor; William Williams, of Hatfield; and Joseph Root, Esq. of ———. The referees met, and after a full hearing of all parties, they made known their judgment, that the town should be divided into two towns, by Connecticut river; stating the terms on which that division should be made, providing, as had been before done in regard to the parishes, that the lands in the common field, or meadow, should be taxed in the town in which the owner lived. They also recommended that the north east part of the town should be made into a separate town; and declared that it was not expedient that any other division should take place. When this report was made known to the town, it was, by a major vote, rejected; and the town determined to oppose such a division. Upon the petition of the first parish, the General Court, after a full hearing, carried into effect this report; and in February, 1773, West Springfield was incorporated into a separate town, upon the terms recommended. Ludlow was also made a separate town at the same time. Ludlow included all that part of the outward commons which lay northerly of Chicopee river, and all the land north of that river, extending one mile and an half west of the outward commons.

I have stated the facts in this case, because some have represented the transaction as an extraordinary one. It has been said, that the majority were set off into a new town, at the request of a minority. This is not true: Springfield then contained more inhabitants than West Springfield. The terms of division, especially as to the right of taxing, have been said to be unjust. Neither is this true: the land in the general field, owned on the east side of the river, were generally in the actual occupation of the owner; and in the mode of access, and cultivation, and getting the crops, usually practised, they passed through no other part of the town, and had no benefits of their roads, schools, &c. Excepting the inconvenience of passing the river, they were as near the owners, on the east side of the river, in many instances, as to the settlements on the west. In many cases, the lands were laid out, and always occupied as appendages to the house lots on the east side of the river. That, including a part of the inhabitants on the east side of the river, a majority of the town were against a division, must be admitted.

The bitterness which this division occasioned, lasted for several years. An alteration was made in the law in regard to taxes, and I believe, the towns are now as much in peace as other towns. In the year 1783, Longmeadow was made into a separate town, by the parish lines.

During the revolutionary war, the town did not very much increase. It felt, in common with the country in general, the pressure of the struggle for independence. But in that period, a foundation was laid for much of its subsequent increase and present prosperity. In the time of the war, this was a recruiting post and a rendezvous for soldiers. Being centrally situated easy of access, and at the same time so far inland as to be out of the reach of sudden invasions of the enemy, it was, early in the war, fixed upon as a suitable place for making and repairing the various munitions of war, and a depot for military stores. At first, the whole was confined to Main street. The various artificers employed, had their shops where they could find a convenient place, and resided themselves in that part of the town. The laboratory for cartridges, and for the various fire works manufactured on such occasions, was in the barn then owned by Ebenezer Stebbins, on the place now owned by Dr. Kingsbury, south of Festus Stebbins'. After two or three years, the public works were removed on to the hill, where they now are. This was done gradually, in the years 1778 and 1779, as accommodations could be found. At first, with the exception of the powder magazine, the whole of the public buildings were placed upon a square of ten acres, on the land appropriated by the town for a training field. A few cannon were cast here during that war, but no small arms were manufactured till after the peace of 1783. At the close of the war, the workmen employed were discharged, and the arsenals, magazine and shops, were left in the charge of a store keeper.

When the object of making arms was under consideration of the national government, in the year 1794, the convenience of the place, and the arsenals, magazines and shops, already here, were a sufficient inducement to establish the national armory here: This was done. At different periods since that time, lands have been purchased, and erections made, for the public accommodation. This establishment has, without question, been one great source of the prosperity of the town.

But, in the chequered scenes of life, we have presented to view some shade, as well as sunshine. The various transactions which took place here, in the attempt forcibly to prevent the execution of the laws, ought not to be unnoticed. Though it might be necessary and expedient, under the then existing circumstances, forcibly to stop the sitting of the courts of Justice, in the year 1774, yet it had a tendency, and in some instances produced the effect, to unhinge people's minds, and to generate a spirit of insubordination. The people, at the close of the revolutionary war, in this part of the country, were very heavily burdened. Their debts were great, and taxes enormous. The different times and occasions, when an armed and organized force was seen in our streets, to prevent the regular administration of justice, from the year 1783 to 1786, I shall not undertake to detail. I think, however, it would be improper to pass without notice, some of the events connected with this town, that took place at what is called the insurrection, or Shay's insurrection. Passing over what had occurred before, in the winter of the year 1787, large bodies of men, were collected from various quarters, organized as a military force. Daniel Shays assumed the general command. From various quarters, the insurgents all seemed to be centered at Springfield. Shays himself, had the command of a large body collected eastward of this town. Luke Day had also a large force in West Springfield. A third party, under Eli Parsons, were at Chicopee. The object was, beyond doubt, to possess themselves of the military stores and arms, at the arsenal here. In arms and ammunition they were quite deficient. A considerable force, by order of government, under the command of Major General Shepard was stationed at the stores, with orders to defend and protect them.

The plan of Shays was, that all three of these bodies should, from different quarters, at the same time, attack the troops at the arsenal. This was good policy; and had it been carried into effect, the town might have been destroyed, or greatly injured. Nothing so much like impending destruction, had taken place since the burning of the town, by the Indians. But the same kind Providence that had before mercifully interposed, now turned the wise counsel into foolishness. Shays sent a message to Parsons and Day, informing them that he should be at the stores, at an appointed hour of the next day, and requesting them to meet him there. Day, for some reason now unknown, or without reason, sent back, that he should not be ready to go that day, but would be there the next. Day's message was intercepted, and the messenger detained, though unknown to either of them.

At the time appointed, notwithstanding repeated cautions and assurances from Shepard, that his approach would be treated as a hostile attack, Shays with his party in close column, drew near the arsenal, and was fired upon by Shepard, and the party soon dispersed. Day and his party, in the meantime, were entirely ignorant of the proceedings here. Though the distance was not more than two miles, in a direct line, the firing of the cannon was not heard, or noticed, at West Springfield. The inhabitants of this town had most of them removed : many of them were, a second time, induced to flee in the dead of night ; but, in fact, there was no danger.

This was one of the most unpleasant occurrences in our history. To see brethren and neighbors in hostile array against each other, and a civil war commencing, was most distressing. Happily, it terminated without much bloodshed, and He who can bring good out of evil, so overruled it that this insurrection aided to lead to the adoption of the Federal Constitution.

There is one other event in our history, which I may notice ; which is, the removal of all the courts from this place to Northampton, in the year 1793. This town had, from the first settlement, been a place for the administration of justice. After the county was formed, a part of the courts had always been holden here. This event, it was supposed, would have an unfavorable effect upon the town. It was considered that the removal of courts from a place where they had long been holden, and where business was arranged with that view, would be prejudicial, even though it were admitted that the original establishment of them in a place might be injurious. It is difficult to determine what the actual consequences were ; for the Armory was first established the year after, and contributed to prevent any injurious effects from being apparent. The re-establishment of courts here, in 1813, shows very plainly that the town has not sustained injury by again becoming a shire town.

The agency which this town had in effecting the settlements about it, may possibly be better understood by bringing them into one view. It appears from the records of the General Court, that the settlement at Northampton, was begun upon the petition of the inhabitants of Springfield, and others, in the year 1653. Mr. Pyncheon and Mr. Holyoke, two of the petitioners, with Samuel Chapin, were appointed to lay out the lands at Marwolluck, or Nanatuck, for it is spelt both ways, either on the west side, or east side of the river, not appropriating more than 100 acres to one person. This was done, and in 1654, a report of the proceedings of the agents was made. They settled the west side of the river. Whether there were many actual settlers removed thither from this place, I have not ascertained. Pyncheon had, however, large grants of land there. He was the agent to buy of the Indians, and one of the superintendents of the plantation, for several years. Hadley, at first embracing both sides of the river, was in the course of a year or two afterwards, disposed of in the same way. In regard to Westfield, Enfield, and Suffield, the case was somewhat different.

As these places were annexed to Springfield, and composed a part thereof, the town, from time to time, made grants of land to individuals.

As to Westfield, the earliest that I find of any grant, is January 7, 1655, when a grant was made to several persons, of lands at Woronoco; and the town agreed that the lands there should be rated only half so much as in the other parts of the town for 6 years. In the year 1663, still farther, and more extensive grants were made there, both on the northerly and southerly side of the river, upon condition the grantees build and settle thereon, in one year, and reside there four years. Some of these grants were to persons from Windsor, but most of them from Springfield. That town was incorporated April 14, 1670. A committee was appointed by the town of Springfield, to lay it out, and grant out house lots. At first, it was only 6 miles square, or equivalent thereto, making the line 9 miles one way. This was confirmed by the General Court.

Several of the inhabitants of Springfield, had grants of land on the way to Windsor. The earliest that I find, is in the year 1664. In 1669, a number of grants were made. It is stated, that if it were well ordered and managed, the land about Stony river might make a fine village, or small plantation. In 1670, upon the petition of several inhabitants of Springfield, the court grant a tract of 6 miles square, for a plantation, or township; provided that in 5 years there be 20 families; and that they procure some able and faithful minister, and maintain him there. Mr. Pynchon and five other inhabitants of Springfield, were authorized to divide, allot and grant out the lands there.

Though grants of land by the town of Springfield, were made much earlier and more extensively at Freshwater, or Enfield, than at Suffield, it happened that Enfield was incorporated at a later period. This was done in the year 1683, upon the petition, as the record states, of Springfield proprietors, extending six miles down Connecticut river, from the mouth of Longmeadow brook, and easterly ten miles from the river. Major Pynchon and others, were authorized to grant out lots and admit inhabitants.

The order of the General Court, in regard to Norwottuck, [Hadley,] is worth noticing. It is stated, that "the persons petitioning to remove into this colony, had begun to remove into Norwottuck, and made some beginning in regard to a plantation on the east side of the river, in order to a plantation, and that there are many desirable persons having a great wish to go along with them, who may in time be joined to that church ; for their further help in the ministry whereby they are enabled not only to carry on a town but church work also, the court grant their desire and appoint persons to lay out the town so as shall be most suitable for the cohabitation and full supply of those people, that this wilderness may be populated, and the main ends of our coming into these parts promoted."

In reviewing the history of the town, while there have been a good proportion of persons of respectable talents and education, I can point to no one who has attained the highest rank. John Pynchon, Esq. may, perhaps, with one exception, be considered as more above his fellows, than any other of the inhabitants. He was born in England, and was a child when his father came to this country. Where he was educated, is to me unknown. He was distinguished in peace and in war. He seems to have been more employed as a negociator with the Indians, than any other one. He was long a magistrate and assistant, and many years a judge. Perhaps he was more confided in by the town, than any other man. In the town records, and also, in the county court records, he is spoken of in the style of "the worshipful Major," or "the worshipful Major Pynchon." He died in this town,§ at an advanced age.

The exception made above, refers to the Hon. John Worthington. His education, and the circumstances of the country, were so extremely different from that of Mr. Pynchon's, that it would be impossible to compare the two men. His talents, had he taken the popular and prevailing side, at the commencement of the revolution, would probably have obtained for him the highest honors in the state.

The town has increased, not only beyond the ideas of the first associates, but far beyond the expectations of many of the present generation. By the last census, there were within the limits of the town, as it was in 1670, no less than 21,581 souls. Within the limits of the present town, by the

The increase of inhabitants is not more remarkable than the settlements eastward of the town brook. Persons now living, can remember when the number of dwelling houses on State street, were only seven, and three or four on Maple street, and not a single one on the hill. On Main street, there were but one or two houses east of the brook; the meadow had a few shops on its margin. The place where the Town Hall stands, was a deep marsh, and the water was frequently standing there in great depth.

To recur to the building of this house, with which I began. It ought to be recollected, that the town, more than a century since, contributed largely to building the old Court House, and had a right to use it for town purposes. That building being so small that it could not contain near all the legal voters in the town, it was manifestly proper that a suitable place should be provided. That this may long continue a place where the inhabitants may peaceably assemble, and transact their municipal concerns, is most fervently to be wished. In order to this, a most important duty devolves on you. In tracing the history of the town, from the first to the present hour, we may fairly claim that it has been as well united as almost any other place. Still there are some things which, on review, can afford no pleasure. There are some dark spots in the picture. If we wish to avoid the mistakes we, or those before us, have committed, and the faults of which we have been guilty, we must, in concert, seek the things which make for peace. Mutual concession must be made; jealousies and heart-burnings must be suppressed. If a fire is seen to be kindling, it must, without delay, be quenched. One section of the town must not claim more than its fair proportion of advantage. The territory of the town is extensive, and the different sections must feel themselves to compose one whole, and seek, not the good of a particular neighborhood, but that of the whole town. A body so numerous as the voters in this town, cannot think alike, on all subjects. A readiness to give others the same privilege of expressing freely their opinions, which we claim for ourselves, is all-important. Efforts to keep order in ourselves, and others, are also requisite. Experience and observation have taught us how easily strife and angry passions may be excited, and it is the duty of all to avoid, as far as possible, the occasions of offence.

It is the right, and I believe, the duty of all, as far as they can, to attend town meetings. I would not go so far as to fine every one who was absent without excuse; but it would be fair to insist that persons so situated, should not find fault with the doings of those who do attend.

Our great sources of expense, schools, highways, and the poor, will demand much and faithful attention. In the first settlement of the country, our ancestors made them a public charge, and obliged every man, according to his ability, to contribute his proportion. Many plausible schemes have been devised, either for throwing off the burden altogether, or shifting it from those who ought to bear it. Were I authorized to advise, I should say,—“Stand ye in the ways; see and ask for the old paths; where is the good way? And walk therein.”

APPENDIX.

[A.]

In a town so extensive as this, for after all that has been lopped off, it is about 10 miles by 7, it is remarkable that all local interests were so far given up as to induce an agreement to build a Town Hall, with great unanimity. There were other interests, and conflicting claims and jealousies, quite as difficult to keep quiet, as those resulting from local situation. Probably, the plan which was adopted, was the only feasible one. The building proposed to be erected, was, of necessity, to be large, or it could not accommodate the town. The town did not require for their use, more than one floor. The Masonic bodies in the town were desirous of erecting for themselves a spacious Hall. From the situation of the ground, it was convenient to have the Town Hall above the basement story; it was therefore proposed to have a range of stores under the Town Hall, and to have the Masons contribute towards the building, according to the accommodation they should have; and that the persons who should contract to build, should have the cellar and basement story, towards a compensation for building. In addition to this, the old Town House was to be disposed of, to the first parish, to procure a title to the ground on which the Hall was to stand. These various interests were brought to unite in the object, and assurances made to secure their respective rights, and the whole completed without accident or contention. The corner stone was laid with appropriate Masonic ceremonies, and addresses made on the occasion. The building was completed February, 1828.

The tradition with regard to building first in Housemeadow, is rendered nearly certain, by an entry in the registry of deeds, made Lib. B. Fol. 20, by John Holyoke, the register, in the year 1679. In a note explaining the terms of an Indian deed, he says, "Agaam.

It is that meadow on the south of Agawam River, where the English did first build a house, which we now commonly call the house meadow, that piece of ground it is which the Indians do call Agawam, and there the english kept their residence, who first came to settle and plant at Springfield now so called." From the expressions here used, "kept their residence," it seems that a house must have been built there; and probably those who came in 1635, lodged there till they went back in the fall.

[C.]

"May the 14th, 1636. We, whose names are underwritten, being by God's Providence, ingaged together to make a plantation, at and over against Agaam on Conecticot doe mutually agree to certayne articles and orders to be observed and kept by us and by our successors, except wee and every of us, for ourselves and in oure persons, shall think meet uppon better reasons to alter our present resolutions.

"1ly. Wee intend, by God's grace, as soon as we can, with all convenient speede, to procure some Godly and faithfull minister, with whome we purpose to joyne in church covenant, to walk in all the ways of Christ.

"2ly. Wee intend, that our towne, shall be composed of fourty familys, or if wee think meete after, to alter our purpose; yet not to exceed the number of fifty familys rich and poore.

"3ly. That every inhabitant shall have a convenient proportion for a house lott, as we shall see meete for every ones quality and estate.

"4ly. That every one, that hath a house lott shall have a proportion of the Cow pasture to the north of End brook, lying northward from the town; and also that every one shall have a share, of the hasseky marish over agaynst his lott, if it be to be had, and every one to have his proportionable share of all the woodland.

"5ly. That every one, shall have a share, of the meddow, or planting ground, over against them as nigh as may be, on Agaam side.

"6ly. That the Longmeddowe, called Masacksick, lying in the way to Dorchester,* shall be distributed to every man, as wee shall think meete, except we shall find other conveniences, for some for theyre milch cattayle and other cattayle also.

* The way to Dorchester was, probably, to Windsor, then called Dorchester.

“7ly. That the meddowe and pasture called, Nayas towards Patuckett, on ye side of Agaam, lyeinge about fower miles above in the ridge shall be distributed” [erasure of six and a half lines,] “as above said in the former order, and this was altered and with consent before the hands were set to it.

“8ly. That all rates that shall arise upon the town, shall be layed upon lands, according to every ones proportion, aker for aker, of howse lotts, and aker for aker of meddowe, both alike on this side, and both alike on the other side; and for farmes, that shall lye farther off, a less proportion, as wee shall after agree except wee shall see meete to remitt one half of the rate from land to other estate.

“9ly. That whereas Mr. William Pynchon, Jehu Burr, and Henry Smith, have constantly continued to prosecute the same, at greate charges, and at greate personal adventure, therefore, it is mutually agreed, that forty acres of meddowe, lying on the south of End brooke, under a hill side, shall belonge to the said partys free from all charges forever. That is to say twenty akers, to Mr. William Pynchon, and his heyres and assigns forever, and ten akers to Jehue Burr, and ten akers to Henry Smith, and to their heyres and assigns forever, which said forty akers is not disposed to them as any allotment of towne lands; but they are to have their accomodations in all other places notwithstanding.

“10ly. That whereas a house was built at a common charge which cost £6 and also the Indians demand a grate some, to bye their right, in the said lands, and also a greate shallope, which was requisite for the first planting, the value of which engagements, is to be borne by each inhabitant, at theyre first entrance, as they shall be rated by us till the said disbursements shall be satisfyed, or else in case the said howse and boat be not so satisfyed for; then so much meddow to be sett out, about the said howse as may counter-vayle the sayd extraordinary charge.

“11ly. It is agreed that no man except Mr. William Pynchon shall have above ten acres for his house lot.

“12ly. Anulled.

“13ly. Whereas there are two Cowe pastures, the one lying towards Dorchester, and the other Northward, froin End brooke. It is agreed that both these pastures shall not be fed at once; but that the time shall be ordered by us in the disposing of it for tymes and seasons, till it be lotted out and fenced in severalty.

“14ly. May 16, 1636. It is agreed that after this day, wee shall observe this rule, about dividing of planting ground, and meddowe, in all planting ground, to regard chiefly, persons, who are most apt to use such ground. And in all meddowe, and pasture, to regard chiefly, cattel and estate, because estate is like to be improved in cattel and such ground is aptest for their use. And yet wee agree that no person, that is master of a lott, though he hath not cattel, shall have less than three acres, of planting ground, and none that have cowes, steeres, or year olds, shall have under one acre a piece, and all horses, not less than four akers, and this order in dividing meddow by cattell, to take place the last of May next, soe that all cattayle that, then appeare, and all estates, that shall then truly appeare, at £20, a Cow shall have this proportion in the medowe, on Agawam side, and in the large meadow, Masaeksiek, and in the other long meddowe called Nayas, and in the pasture at the north end of the town called End brook.

“15ly. It is ordered that for the disposinge of the hassaky marish, and the granting of homelots, these five men undernamed, or theyre Deputys, are appoynted, to have full power, namely, Mr. Pynchon, Mr. Michell, Jehue Burr, William Blake, Henry Smith.

“It is ordered that William Blake, shall have sixteen polle, in bredth for his homelott, and all the marsh in bredth abuttinge at the end of it, to the next highland, and three aeres more in some other place.

“Next the lott of William Blake, Northward lys the lot of Thomas Woodford, being twelve polls broad, and all the marish before it to the upland. Next the lott of Thomas Woodford lys the lott of Thomas Ufford, beinge fourteen rod broad, and all the marish before it to the upland. Next the lot of Thomas Ufford, lyes the lott of Henry Smith, being twenty rod in breadth, and all the marish before it, and to run up in the upland on the other side to make up his upland lott ten acres.

“Next the lott of Henry Smith lyes the lott of Jehue Burr, being twenty rods in breadth, and all the marish in bredth abuttinge, at the end of it, and as much upland ground on the other side as shall make up his lott ten acres.

“Next the lott of Jehue Burr, lyes the lot of Mr. William Pynchon; beinge thirty rod in bredth, and all the marish at the east end of it, and an addition, at the further end, of as much marish, as make the whole twenty foure acres ; and as much upland adjoining, as makes the former howse lott, thirty acres in all togethether fifty fowre acres.

“Next the lott of Mr. Pynchon lyes the lott of John Cabel, fowreteene rod, in breadth, and fowre acres and halfe of marish at the end of his lott.

“Next the lott of John Cable, lys the lott of John Reader, beinge twelve rod in breadth and fowre acres and a halfe in marish at the fore end of his homelot.

“The lotts of Mr. Matthew Michell, Samuel Butterfield, Edmund Wood, and Jonas Wood, are ordered to lye, adjoining to mill brooke, the whole being to the number of twenty-five acres, to begin three of them on the greate river, and the fowrth on the other side of the small river.

“It is ordered that for all highways, that shall be thought necessary, by the five men, above named, they shall have liberty and power, to lay them out, when they shall see meete, though it be at the end of mens lotts, givinge them allowance for so much ground.

“We testife to the order abovesaid being all of the first adventurers and undertakers for this Plantation.

[D.]

There is no evidence, from the town records that Mr. Mitchell, the two Woods, Blake, Ufford, Reader, Woodford, or Butterfield, remained here any time. When they went, I have no information. From the title given to Mitchell, “Mr. Matthew Mitchell,” he must have been a man of some note. Jehu Burr, called by some historians, John Burr, from a mistake in reading the old writing, was a carpenter. He was here in 1639. When a voluntary rate was made for Mr. Moxon's house, he paid a larger sum than any other, except Mr. Pynchon. In January, 1642, he seems to have left the place. A person of that name appears on the Connecticut records as a magistrate or deputy.

A fact is mentioned in the addition to the last edition of Winthrop's Journal, to show that the General Court of Massachusetts considered all the settlements as still subject to them. "1636, 4th month, 28. Warrant to the constable of Watertown at Connecticut, [Wethersfield,] to seize and inventory, John Oldham's goods, who had been slain by the Indians, for payment of his debts.

"1635. By the General Court it was ordered that there shall be two Drakes lent to the plantations at Conecticott, to fortifie themselves withall, also six barrels of powder, (2 out of Watertown, 2 out of Dorchester, and 2 out of Rocksbury,) also 200 shott, with other implements, belonging to the ——— that may conveniently be spared all which are to be returned again upon demande."

“ February the 14 1638.

“ Wee the Inhabitants of Agaam upon Quinnetticut taking into consideration the manifold inconveniences that may fall upon us, for want of some fit magistracy among us. Being now, by Gods Providence, fallen into the line of the Massachusetts jurisdiction; and it being farr off to repayre thither in such cases of Justice as may often fall out among us, doe therefore think it meett by a general consent and vote, to ordaine, (till we receive further directions from the General Court, in the Massachusetts Bay,) Mr. William Pynchon, to execute the office of a magistrate, in this our plantation of Agaam. viz. To give oaths to constables and military officers, to direct warrants, both processes, executions, and attachments, to heare and examine misdemeanor, to inflict corporal punishment, as whipping, stockinge, byndinge to the peace or good behaviour, and in some cases, to require sureties, or if the offence require it to commit to prison, and in defaults of a comon prison, to committ delinquents to the charge of some fit person or persons till Justice may be satisfied.

Also in the tryall of actions for debt or trespass, to give oaths, direct juries, depone witnesses, take verdicts, and keep records of verdicts, judgments, and executions, and whatever else may tend to the kings (or keeping) peace, and the manifestation of our fidelity to the bay jurisdiction, and the restraining of any that violate Gods laws; or lastly, whatever, else may fall within the power of an assistant, in the Massachusetts.

It is also agreed uppon, by a mutuall consent, that in case any action of dett, or trespasse be to be tryed, seeing a Jury of 12 fit persons, cannot be had, at present, among us, that six persons, shall be esteemed a good, and sufficient Jury, to try any action under the sum of ten pounds, till we see cause to the contrary, and by common consent shall alter this number of Jurors, or shall be otherwise directed from the general court in the Massachusetts.”

The hill east of the original settlement furnishes a very great supply of springs of the purest water, as they issue from the sand. There are within the bounds of the present town four streams emptying into the Connecticut, sufficient to carry mills, and are improved for that purpose. Pecowsic, which is on the southern border, Mill river, called by the Indians, Usquaick, the Chicopee, and the Willimansit. Garden brook, called in the records also, ye town brook, rises on the plains, and comes to the street opposite to Mr. Pynchon's settlement, before which it separates, and a part of it flows off northward, and a part of it along by the side of the street, upwards of a mile. On this, near its mouth, the first Grist mill was erected. Mill river, and the Chicopee, have been very extensively improved for mills, and machinery, of all kinds, impelled by water. The latter is capable of being improved for those purposes, to almost any indefinite extent. The same observations may be made with regard to West Springfield, in a very considerable degree, though the mill seats have not been so much occupied. The Agawam, or Westfield river, if not diverted for the uses of the canal, must afford valuable situations for mills.

Hutchinson says, Pynchon was a gentleman of learning, as well as religion. He laid the foundation of Roxbury; but afterwards, removed to Connecticut river, and was the father of the town of Springfield. Johnson, in his "Wonder-working Providence," published in 1654, says: "About this time, Mr. Pynchon, sometime a magistrate, having out of a desire, to better his estate, by trading with the Indians, settled himself, very remote, from all the churches of Christ, in the Massachusetts Government, upon the river Connecticut, yet under their Government, he having some godly, persons resorting unto him, they there erected a town, and church of Christ, calling it Springfield, it lying upon this large navigable river hath the benefit of transporting their goods by water, and also fitly seated for the Beaver trade with the Indians, till the merchants increased so many that it became little, worth by reason of their out buying one another;* which caused them to live upon husbandry; the town is mostly built, along the river side, and upon some little rivulets of the same. There hath of late been more than one or two in this town greatly suspected of witchcraft, yet have they used much dilligence, both for the finding them out, and for the Lords assisting them against their witchery; yet have they, as is supposed,

* Mr. Pynchon seems to have been an extensive dealer in furs, while at Roxbury. He farmed out the privilege, and paid a sum to the General Court. After he came to Springfield, he pursued the same business. Woronoco was a place famous for the beaver trade; and Mr. Pynchon paid the General Court a certain sum for the right to trade with the Indians in furs.

bewitched not a few persons, among whom, two of the reverend elder's children. These people inhabiting the town, having gathered into a church body called to the office of a pastor, the reverend Mr. Moxon who remaineth with them at this very day. Of whom as followeth :

As thou with strong and able parts art made,
 Thy person stout, with toyl, and labour shall,
 With help of Christ, through difficulties wade,
 Then spend for him : spare not thyself, at all,
 When errors crowd, close to thyself and friends,
 Take up truths sword, trifle not time for why,
 Christ called his people, hither for those ends,
 To tell the world that Babels fall is nigh,
 And that his churches, through the world shall spread,
 Maugre the might of wicked men and devils,
 Then Moxon, thou needst not at all to dread
 But be avenged on Satan for his evils.
 Thy Lord Christ, will under thy feet him tread."

When this account of Moxon was written, he was here ; but before it was published he had returned to England. He died, very poor, out of the ministry, September 15, 1687.

An explanation of the Indian names of places in this deed, which is almost cotemporaneous, is made by John Holyoke, in the margin of the registry of it, in 1679. He says, "Agaam is that meadow on the south of Agaam river where the English first built. Quana is middlemeadow adjoining to it. Masacksick is the long meadow. Usquaick is mill river and the lands adjoining it. Nayassett is the three corner meadow and land adjoining, extending northerly to Chicopee river."

The deed of Northampton from the Indians, to John Pynchon, is dated September 24, 1653. Chichaallop, and a number of other chiefs named, all of Nonatuck, sold all the grounds on the west side Quinnecticott river, beginning from the small river, below Manhan, called Sonkwank, and so up by Quinnecticott river, to the little meadow called Capawonk, namely to the little brook, or gutter, on this side Capawamp, which little brook is called Musquamp, and all the ground westward from Quinnecticott, for nine miles out into the woods, as far as Nausconick. The grounds included are there called by many Indian names. This deed was assigned to Northampton inhabitants, Jan. 16, 1662.

[M.]

The rule of apportioning these lands to individuals, was by estates and polls. The polls to be estimated at twelve pounds each, and all male children under age to be considered as polls. It was also ordered, that when divided while common or unfenced, they should be free to all the inhabitants for grass, herbage and timber, and till improved, should not be taxed. There was a provision for a school and a ministry lot in each of these divisions.

The laws of the colony were at this time in manuscript. They were not printed till 1651; and it is doubtful whether, even then, a copy was kept here.

* This regulation as to candlewood, refers to the state of the plains, and the customs of the people, at that time. By the perishing of old trees, there were, on and in the ground, many pine knots, and hearts of trees, which were generally used for torch lights. Till within 50 years, it was the custom of the people, to have gathered, every fall, for family use, a quantity of these pine knots, &c. A prudent farmer would almost as soon enter upon the winter without hay, as without pine. This was gathered on all uninclosed land, wherever found.

“ 18 and 19. [The 18th and 19th are respecting fences, and the oversight and repair of them, and have nothing peculiar in them.]

“ 20. For the better carryinge on of Toune meetings, it is ordered that whensoever, there shall any public notice, be given to the Inhabitants by the select Tounsmen, or any other, in theyre behalfe, of some necessary occation, wherein the selectmen desire, to advise with the Inhabitants, and the day, tyme, and place of meetinge be appoynted, It is expected, that all the Inhabitants attend personally, such meeting, soe appoynted. And, in case, the tyme and houre of meetinge be come, though there be but nine of the Inhabitants assembled, it shall be lawfull for them to proceed, in agitation of whatever busyness is there propounded to them, and what the major part of the Assembly there mett shall agree upon. “ 21. The first Tuesday in November yearly [altered afterwards to February,] is mutually agreed on and appoynted, to be a general toune meetinge, for the choyce of Toune officers making, continuing and publishing of orders, &c. on which day, it is more especially, expected that each inhabitant, give his personall attendance, and if any shall be absent, at the tyme of calling, or absent himself without consent of the major part, he shall be lyable to a fine of 2s. 6d.

as shall come to their knowledge, either by their own observation, or by credible information, of others, and shall take out process for the appearance of such as are delinquents, or witnesses, to appeare the sayd day ; when all such presentments, by the sayd partys, shall be judicially heard, and examined, by the magistrate, and warrants for distresses, granted for the levying of such fines or penaltys as are annexed to the orders violated, or which shall seeme meete and reasonable to the magistrate, to impose, or inflict, according to the nature of the offence. These to stand in this office for a year or till others be chosen in their roome.*

“ 23. It is ordered and declared, that when any man, shall be fairly and clearly chosen, to any office, or place of service, in and to the toune, if he shall refuse to accept, or shall afterwards neglect to serve, in that office, to which he shall be chosen, every such person shall pay 20s. fine for refusall to the Toune Treasurer, unless he has served in that office the yeare before ; no person being, to be compelled to serve two years, together in the same office, except selectmen, two whereof, if chosen againe, are to stand two yeares together ; that so, there may be always some of the old selectmen who are acquainted with the Toune affaires, joining with the new.

24.—[Relates to the regulation of swine, and is not necessary to be transcribed. An officer, unusual in later years, was chosen as a general swine ringer, and his fees stated.]

“ 25. To the end that the common Highways of the Toune, may be layed out where they may be most convenient, and advantagiose, for the general use of the toune, it is therefore ordered, that the select Tounsmen shall have full power, and authority, to lay out all common highways, for the Toune, where and how they shall judge most convenient, and useful, for the Inhabitants, though it be through or at the end of mens lotts. Provided, they give them reasonable satisfaction, according to equity ; but if the party like not thereof, then it shall be referred, to the Judgment of indifferent partys mutually chosen, by the partye and the select Tounsmen : and if those two indifferent partys, do not agree they shall pitch upon a 3d person to join with them and determine it.

“ 26. And the Select Tounsmen are allowed liberty to set a certaine toll, on carts, that shall pass any highway, which shall appeare more than ordinary chargeable, in the reparation of it.

* These officers, called presenters, were chosen for many years. After grand jurors were chosen, they had only town orders to execute.

“27. For the equall and indifferent carryinge on and bearinge the charge, of makinge and repayreing such common highways, and bridges as are, or shall be thought, needful, to be made, or repayred, from tyme to tyme, within this township, it is ordered, that every householder, that hath, or keepeth in his use, or possession a Teame, consistinge of four cattell, shall on due warninge, given him by the surveyor, send at every day, and place appoynted, his said teame, with his cart and such necessary tooles, as the surveyor shall allowe of, and an able man therewith, to doe such work, as the surveyor shall appoynt him. The like is to be done, by those that have but halfe teames. And it is further ordered, that every other householder, who hath no teame, shall by himself or some other faithful labourer, attend the worke appoynted him, by the surveyors, on every day that he shall be called, or required soe to worke. And it is alsoe ordered, that all persons inhabitinge in the toune, who are above £100, estate in other rates, and yet have no teame, every such person shall be compellable to send one sufficient labourer, to the highway worke, on every day, that he shall be duly warned thereunto, accordinge to his proportion with other men.

“It is alsoe further ordered, that every person shall cut downe his stubbs, and cleare the highway before his lott, of tymber wood, standing trees, (which are hereby declared to be a mans oun,) or any other offensive matter, that the surveyors shall warne him of, within three days after notice given him, or else be lyable to a fine of 12d. for every defect.

“28. Whereas, there are surveyors, chosen yearly, for the oversight and amendinge of highways, bridges, and other defects of that nature, that soe the common highways of the Toune may be kept in continuall reparation. To that end, and for the regulatinge of surveyors, in the discharge of their office, It is ordered yt ye surveyors for the tyme beinge, shall take care, 1. That highways, bridges, wharfs, &c. belonging to theyre care, be made, repayred, and amended sufficiently, accordinge to theyre discretion, or as they shall be directed by the select Tounsmen. 2. That all highways be kept clear from trees, Timber, wood, earth, stone, or any other offensive matter yt shall annoy the highway, within a mile of any dwelling house. 3. That if any person, upon notice given him by the surveyor, shall neglect to remove, or cleare away, any such annoyance to the highway, or offensive matter, by him caused, longer than 3 days, then the surveyor shall doe it, and have double recompense for all his labor, cost and charge, from the party so neglecting, besides the 12d. which the party is to pay in way of fine, for neglect, according to the order forementioned. 4. That the surveyor shall give three days warning to such as they call for, and require to come to the highway worke, viz. the day of warning and a day more, soe that men must come the 3d day after warning, unless the surveyors give them longer tyme. 5. That they shall require no householder to worke above 6 days in a yeare, nor more of these six days than shall, in a due proportion, fall to his share. 6. That the surveyors shall require no man to worke above two days in a weeke. 7. That they call for these 6 days, for as many of them as shall serve, within the compass of tyme betwixt the 20th of May and 20th of June, yearly, and not at any other tyme, unless by the consent of the major part of the select Tounsmen, it be agreed unto; and yet, inasmuch as sometimes ways suddenly become defective, that they may not too long be neglected, it is declared, that three of ye selectmen meetinge, and any two of them agreeing, may appoynt and allow the surveighours to repaire such defective ways. 8. That they duly present to the select Tounsmen, all defects of persons, or teames, that, on lawfull warning given, neglect to come to the worke appoynted, who shall give warrant to the constable, for present distress, of 2s. fine for a man, and 5s. for a man and teame, to be employed in the next worke that is to be done about highways. 9. That they give in theyre accounts yearly, to the selectmen, at the general meetinge in November, when they yield up their office another yeare."

These byelaws, some of them, were made at an earlier date, and adopted into this code at this time. They were all revised and transcribed, in the year 1664, and entered in another book. Some of them were then modified, and a few of them repealed. The most of them were never formally annulled; but as new circumstances occurred, and other regulations, either public or private, were made, they went out of use.

There were two or three regulations, not in this system, which ought to be noticed, As to highways, in 1640, the surveyor was to "oblige all to remove stubbs, saw pits, or tymbber, from the highways; and if any person neglected, he should forfeite 1s. and if continued, 2s."

As far as the brook lay upon the street, there was a special regulation as to that, made in 1657: "that all the Inhabitants between Mr. John Pynchon's and the lower side of Benjamin Parsons', who are proprietors of any part or parcel of the wet meadow before our doors, shall take care to cleare and scour the brook, soe far as theyre lott or alotments is in breadth, in the same meadow; and that it be done sufficiently, to the approbation of the selectmen: and that by the last of June next, upon penalty of 3s. 4d. per week, for every parcell that is found undone at that tyme, and so to continue pr. week, till the worke be fully done; the which fines shall be duly levied by the constable, and improved for public use."

In 1660, this subject was again before the town, when, uniting an order made January, 1638, as to scouring ditches before the houses, and the order of 1656-7, it was provided "that the proprietors of the meadows should keep a good and sufficient ditch, well cleared, for the easy and ready passage of ye water, and for that purpose, from 6 or 8 rods above where the brook come to the street, should annually, in the month of May, scour and cleare ye said ditches and water passages, of sand, dirt, wood, or any rubbish, so that ye water may have free passage away, without penning up, to flow the meadows. Every person neglecting, to pay 5s. to the town, and for after neglects, 3s. 4d. a week: the whole to be done under the care of two of the selectmen, to be specially appoynted for that purpose."

The method of defraying town charges, appears to have been one of some difficulty. At first, the assessment was upon land, by the acre; this was afterwards confined to the homelots. To pay for the land purchased of the Indians, each individual was assessed according to the quantity of land he held. In 1655, it was ordered that "all lands and howsing, and live stock, which a person owned, should be appraised and assessed at their value."

This mode of rating was again altered Feb. 1660-1. Houses, lands, and living stock, (except swine put up for fattening and killing,) were to be appraised and assessed; and men's persons also, to be valued from 16 years old and upward, at £12, £16, or £20, at the discretion of the selectmen; all except sick or infirm, to be included. Men also to be rated for their merchandising and trading, according to the trade they drive in the town, to be determined by the selectmen. In 1663, a fourth class for rating persons, was made, to be set at £8. All were to be valued by the appraisers.

At the first settlement of the town, it was much infested with wolves and foxes. A premium was given for the killing of each. This was to be levied, at first, only upon cattle; but afterwards, it was a general charge upon the town. Some years, the claims on this account amounted to a considerable sum.

To shew the value of estate here, at an early period, and the relative value of its different kinds, I have taken from the Pyncheon records, a copy of the inventory of Nathaniel Bliss, taken February 14, 1654-5. He lived a little south of where Union street unites with Main street.

It seems that the cows were appraised at upwards of $16 each, while land in the homelot and meadows was not more than $5 an acre. Land was then abundant, and cattle were very scarce. It appears that the accounts of the selectmen were audited yearly, and a particular statement made and entered on the record. A minute account was given of the town's property: e. g. In 1660, it is noticed, "that Lawrence Bliss is to pay for the chain of the steel-trap which he lost; and there is one of the town's one iron hook and eye, in the post of the gate going to the training place, and another at Thomas Cooper's house."

[O.]

On the subject of the roads in the town, though there is no record of the laying out of Main street, yet it is constantly referred to, as a road, a street, and a highway. It was ordered to be four rods in breadth, till it left the brook, and then to be three rods; and from the bridge across the brook, to the gate at the upper end of Longmeadow, it was to be also four rods, and through the meadow, of the same width. It passed under Longhill. The town street has been several times regulated; it was done in 1664, by the selectmen, and in 1769, by a committee of the Court of Sessions, when it was made a county road, if not before. The upper end of the street was made 6 rods wide, in 1662, from the bank of the meadows up to Round hill. The road through the meadow, called the middle causey, now State street, was only two rods wide; the road from the meadow up the hill, was wide. From the rear of the wood lots, to pass up the great hill, it was twenty rods broad; the principal ascent was overcome by winding up the hill, farther south than any part of the present county road. The road to the burying ground was originally only one rod, then altered to $1\frac{1}{2}$, and afterwards to two rods. The original roads to Skipmuck, the Sixteen-acre road, the road through Longmeadow, and through West Springfield, on the way to Windsor, were all laid and kept, many years, twenty rods wide.

[P.]

The right to permit cattle to run upon the town commons, was considered, in the early settlement of the town, a most important privilege. It was constantly exercised by the inhabitants, and much dependence was placed upon the commons for pasturing cattle during the summer. The highways that were laid twenty rods broad, were laid of that width, avowedly, for the purpose of pasturage. The cattle were all branded, and each man's brand was recorded. While wood lands remained uncultivated and unfenced, the right of pasturing upon them was claimed; and for more than a century and a half, was exercised, without question or dispute. Nearly all the milch cows, as well as young cattle, which were kept in the town, especially in the first parish, were, till within forty years, depastured on the commons. There were many evils in this practice: cattle would destroy young timber; persons were tempted to set fire to the woods, that there might be better feed. After the country became populous, the pasture grounds were diminished, and the ancient simplicity and honesty being much diminished, it was found that cattle were not very safe on the plains. Immediately after the law authorizing towns to restrain cattle from going at large, was passed, in 1800, this town passed a vote imposing such a restraint. This has tended to increase the growth of wood, and also the quantity of pasture land.

INDEX TO NAMES.

PART I.—CHRISTIAN NAMES OF CHAPINS.

THE figures at the left hand of the names denote the number of the Generation. After I had completed the numbering of the Genealogy, I received several additional names, in some instances one in a family, in others three or four and more, and several whole families, and a few names were overlooked. Those who are not numbered are designated by pages, thus, "Silas, p. 48." Those in the Appendix are designated thus, "Lucy W., ap."
